FIRING UP

After capturing the Scottsburg sectional title, girls basketball captain Carla Eades leads her teammates in the cutting of the net. The team 'fired up' to finish the regular season with a record of 13-2.

Randy Johann and Kyle Shadley reach to catch the spilling candy and bubble gum in the spirit stick, held by Troy Hoffman. The football team was presented the stick for having the most spirit at a pep session.

Starting to fire up

It looked like just another year as students clamored into school in mid-August. Few knew they were the first students returning to school in Indiana. They were more concerned with the basic changes that occupy the initial weeks. Getting out of bed and back into the 8:30-3:20 grind provided the first readjustment. People were closely scrutinized as fellow classmates noticed such changes in appearance as a new haircut or a deep tan. Sophomores groped their way around a different building and adapted to a new atmosphere. Juniors and seniors, used to the former activities schedule, felt confusion right along with the sophomores when activities day arrived. A few people complained about the policy reducing student personal leave days from five to three, but most individuals did not care. However, the community, as well as students, voiced opinions over the building and renovation proposal. The project would have moved ninth graders to the high school. It also included building and improving athletic facilities, constructing a new auditorium and renovating the current auditorium into classrooms. The plan was killed later in the year because of local disapproval in a tax increase. Nothing really spectacular. It could have been any year—until the 1,075 classmates started firing up.

Lead guitarist Ron Corthers in the visiting group Freetime lays aside his instrument and serenades junior Lori Morrison with the song "Sad Eyes," one of the top 100 hits of 1979.

Mark Goldsmith lifts a weight holding 85 pounds in an afterschool training session for football. Although the regular season was completed, Mark and others kept in shape for next fall.

As coach Jim Kaczmarek and team look on, quarterback John McIntire cuts the pre-game nourishments before the season opener with Greensburg. The team lost by a score of 21-6.

Football games provide a time for socializing, as well as watching the game. Sophomore Karla Miller, Tracy Frazier and Patti Hall congregate near the refreshment stand for this purpose.

While his opponent bridges in resistance, two-year varsity wrestler Tim Konkle makes a move to pin him. Tim wrestled in the 177 weight class. The team posted a 10-6 record.

Thespians Kathy Peters and Tracy Anderson cram for study time before going on stage for dress rehearsal of the off-school play, "The Missing Link." Tracy held the lead role in the play, whereas Kathy played a secondary part.

FIRING UP

Classes and organizations witnessed a new kind of spirit and unity as they fired up together. Seniors were unified because "misery loves company." They moaned together when they had to go through pictures sessions again because of a photography error in the environmental scenes. The class also became the first in class history to purchase T-shirts with the names of all the graduating class. Although the juniors fell short under their goal, competition was still hotly rewarded during magazine sales. The students staring at upperclassmen class rings were sure to be sophomores pondering the style of ring to purchase. All classes entered in Homecoming week festivities by dressing for spirit week and decorating floats. A few even became Greek for the first Toga Day. Wednesday evening of that week a bonfire was lighted in the student parking lot to rouse spirit. Even after the blaze, students still had not finished firing up.

The pompon girls move to the best of "Gospel John" as they entertain the student body at a pep session. The girls also did this and other routines at the basketball games.

Senior Randy Johann devotes a short period of his time at a boys' basketball game to sell refreshments at the Hi-Y stand. Hi-Y and Sunshine had stands to raise money for service projects.

Tammy Smith prepares to dissect a baby pig in Mr. Dave Waltz's fourth period biology class. Tammy wears one of the senior class T-shirts containing the names of the graduating seniors.

Liss Kidwell uses green spray paint to decorate the "highlights" for the junior class float. The float was centered around the theme of "No Land Is Too High For the Mighty Cubs."

Doug Thoyer grasps two mirrors to reflect the sun's rays for an experiment in Mr. Virgil Imel's third period physics class. Although it was a hazy day, the experiment proved a success—the class even toasted weiners from the heat produced.

Keith Bege temporarily leaves the farm-work to wash and dry the dishes in his second period beginning home-economics class. Keith represents one of the 17 boys in the class.

Mark Bishop whips out his trusty calculator to assist him with his homework in his fifth period class, trigonometry. The course served as preparation for Mr. Jerry Douglas' calculus class the next semester.

Sunshine officer Lisa Ricketts pins the Sunshine symbol on new member, Marcie Steinert, at the club's initiation meeting. Sunshine normally met in the auditorium during the third hour activities schedule.

We're fire fired up and ready

In basketball crazy Indiana, local interest in the sport currently has dwindled greatly; nevertheless, a small Girls' Pep Club yelled, "We're fired up and ready!" The whole school began to show this attitude as the year came to a climax.

Convocations, pep sessions, and the all-school play broke up the daily monotony, while special events such as the Globetrotter's and a Free Fare concert highlighted the school nights. Preparation for Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays unified students, especially club members sharing gifts and food baskets with the needy.

Even controversy served to unite the school. Seniors threatened a boycott of boy's basketball games when only one senior made the team. Senior faces appeared in the crowd, however, when rival Southwestern visited the home court. Various events of the night landed on the editorial page from a critical Southwestern fan. Letters of retaliation from both schools followed for several weeks. The controversy claiming the greatest effect on the students emerged in the student council's struggle. Their plan—rewarding students who had not missed any days, by not making final exams count if it hurt their grade—was eventually passed.

As the first semester ended and a new decade began, we had less of this and more of that. The halls were less crowded when 65 seventh-semester graduates left the building, and the rest of the school population dropped by 33. By having five snow days, the semester was shorter than the first. But even with less, the list of honors and superstars in the school grew ... because we were "fired up and ready ready."

As the crowd waits in anticipation, junior Phil Love aims for the basket. Tony Povaleri dodges his opponent so that he can be available for the rebound, in the event that Phil misses.

Junior Loren Stewart executes the technique of rifle twirling for the band and drill team's half-time performance during the football game against New Albany.

DeWayne Perry stretches to put a glass ornament on the Christmas tree. The tree in the lobby, provided by the student council, helped put students in a holiday mood, during finals week.

Tina Marcum prepares to grab from the variety of candy, crackers and mints. Tina donated her time during fourth period study hall to working in the bookstore.

Carla Eades and Helen Lyons nominate the senior-class rendition of Steve Martin's "King Tut," called "King Cub," during the pep session before the annual "turkey shoot" against Southwestern.

Wrestler Pat Auxier smiles as he proudly displays his trophy for winning in his weight class at the Jeffersonville meet. Later in the season, Pat advanced to the semi-state level in the sport.

Junior Alice Sargent watches majorette Shan Wilson for the signal to twirl her rifle during the half-time performance of a football game. Alice served as a rifle girl for her first time this year.

Like logs in a carefully tended fire, each part of the year helped to shape the individual student. Every happening, whether it be taking a test, or attending a concert, played some part in the busy year. Even things such as the junk food eaten, or the transportation at school made their impact. From the log that started the fire—homecoming—to the fading embers of graduation, each log in the fire of a student's life provided vital framework to shaping the year.

Prior to the judging of class decorations for basketball spirit week, senior Helen Lyons volunteers part of lunch-hour to helping the 'Cubs paint the sectional red—the senior theme for decorations. The class was announced the winner of the contest.

Chuck Sommons drinks and shakes a baby bottle full of Coke, as quickly as he can. Chuck, along with two others, represented the football team in a spirit contest at a fall pep session.

RING UP

As a part of his lifeguarding duties, Ron Dunbar pours chlorine into the deep end of the Madison Country Club swimming pool. Ron also worked part-time at the club's pro shop for a summer job.

David Irwin paddles as his kayak skims the surface of Whitewater River. Churches and other organizations took trips and retreats to break up the monotony of hot summer days.

Bahamas, beaches, boring

"It was boring!" Boring for some, the 'best ever' for others. The 84 days comprising summer vacation varied from person to person.

The extended time in comparison to other vacations, allowed students to travel long distances. Sam Zelony, for instance, traveled to Israel during June on funds his grandmother set aside. The senior visited the Wailing Wall, David's Tomb, and a crusader's castle, among other things. The traveler noted he was 'a little scared' when a bomb exploded within a block where he stood.

That dream trip—a seven day cruise to the Bahamas—highlighted Matt Webster's vacation. Rather than shun water while away from work, the lifeguard skin-dived just off of one of the uninhabited Bahama islands, and rode a bamboo raft down a Jamaican river, as well as climbed the Dunes River Waterfall. On the ship itself, the senior said he enjoyed trap shooting. His favorite part of the week, however, occurred in Nassau, where he viewed a Las Vegas night show.

Most of the student body remained on the continent, or at least in the United States, traveling in four directions. While John McIntire stayed in Texas, Shawny Anderson, Beth Cox, Mark Horine, Sally Jacobs, Eric Jones, Kelly Methany attended a missionary conference in Pennsylvania. Sophomore Cathy Pedigo journeyed north for her annual trip to Canada. The beaches of Hawaii attracted Wanda Wentworth for 14 days in the sun.

Camps, retreats, and conventions closer to home occupied the summer for people like Betty Louden, who attended a church camp. The high point of Luann Hord's vacation happened at an Indiana State Guild convention, where she sang, listened to speakers, heard a concert and visited a Masonic home. Members of Brent Howell's church relaxed during a canoe trip down Whitewater River. A music clinic at Indiana University further educated Tammy Simmonds in her playing of the flute.

One senior, Becky Ford, combined work, education and camping experiences. The youth worked for the United States Forest Service, learning how to care for the outdoors and wildlife. During her eight weeks at the Youth Conservation Corps, not only did Becky receive pay, but gained high school credit as well. The camper stated she enjoyed "meeting kids from all over Indiana."

Andy Damm and DeWayne Perry were greeted by plenty of strangers on their escapade too. The two entered unofficially in the WAKY raft race to 'have some fun.' What Andy recalled most vividly about the ride was going down the Ohio River and strangers on the banks and other rafts saying 'hi.' Even though they became the race's unofficial winners, they collected no prize money since they had not paid the entry fee.

For other people, the summer seemed pretty much the same as usual—except Lora Bush added it was 'more boring.' However, even those who termed the season 'boring' busied themselves by taking summer school, working, laying out in the sun, swimming, playing tennis or watching soap operas.

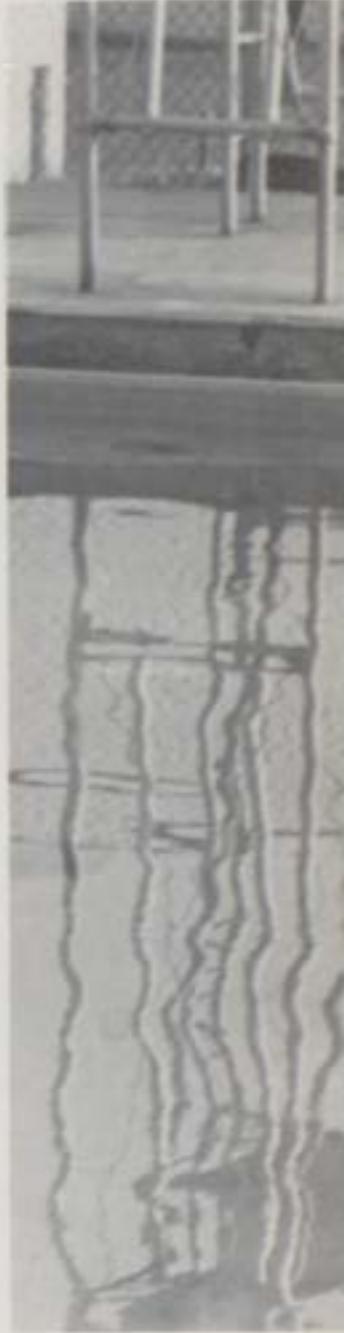

No matter what one's summer contained, all agreed with Sheila Sloan, "It ended too soon!"

by Lisa Calvin

A playful push sends Shelly Anderson sprawling into the Clifty Falls State Park swimming pool. As a member of the swim team, Shelly spent an average of four hours a day practicing this summer.

Darlene Anderson leaps into her forehand position with determination to return the volley. Playing tennis proved to be a popular summer sport, with ever-present waiting lines for court time.

Victory highlights

Big Red celebration

Coaches, parents, fans and players finally had their wishes fulfilled when the Cubs "undertook a victory" as suggested by the winning Homecoming float. The mighty Cubs posted a 10-0 victory over the Floyd Central Highlanders, celebrating their first Homecoming win in five years. This high spirited success also marked the school's first football victory of the past 20 games.

However, the long-awaited win did not come easily. Behind it existed a week of hard practices, float preparation, timely organizing and planning.

A new and unusual spirit day, toga day, added a bit of variety to the traditional events of the week. Togas existed in a wide variety. Among the most original was Mr. Keith Alexander's Snoopy sheet and Laura Parker's Roman type toga topped with an arrangement of leaves. Unidentified members of the "Ku Klux Klan" were also seen throughout the day.

Besides raising spirit, the successful pre-game bonfire also increased everyone's determination to win. Music by the pep band, lively cheers by the cheerleaders and a pep talk by Coach Jim Koczmarek formed a hopeful feeling of victory.

All agreed that the victorious outcome was well worth the work, especially the senior class who received first place for their superior float. Senior Anita Scroggins will also long remember the busy week that led to her crowning as queen.

Those who participated in the week's activities will never forget the final score or the victory dance that followed. For the pride expounded and the confidence grew as players and fans rejoiced in their first seasonal win.

by Twyla Scudder

Homecoming queen candidates Leanna Taylor, Beth Elton, Heidi Isom, Lisa Roberts and Nancy Craig, elected by members of their senior class by popular vote, chose Steve Royce, Matt Webster, Jay Simons, David Hill and Brody Gruenmer as their escorts.

Seniors Peggy Crawford, Nancy Craig and Demi Hall carefully add important final touches to their winning class float while anxiously awaiting the pre-game bonfire.

Senior Sam Zelony (25) and junior Chuck Sommons (73) exhibit their team spirit following a touchdown by junior Tim Davis. Tim's touchdown added to the Cub's score for a final 10-0 victory.

Happiness and joy burst forth in the form of smiles, cheers and tears as Anita Scroggins, escorted by senior Tim Fumish, accepts the Homecoming queen crown.

Celebrating a well deserved win, junior Kim Burnette and friends get down to the beat of Power Plant, a local band who provided lots of hard rock for the victory dance.

Globetrotters amuse near capacity crowd

The famous melody of "Sweet Georgia Brown" filled the gym while the Harlem Globetrotters strutted their exceptional basketball talents before 5,000 cheering fans, who like all the other people who have seen them perform, loved every minute of it.

The Globetrotters came to Madison in early November at the invitation of the Madison Cub Booster Club. The proceeds from the fund-raising game went to benefit the junior and senior high athletic programs.

The "wild and crazy" antics of the Trotters brought cheers and laughs from the filled house time and time again. Fans were treated to the patented highjinks of the team such as the famous substitution of a bucket of confetti for the bucket of water routine, which caused the fans to duck for fear of getting wet.

Geese Ausbie's "persuader" turned out to be the big hit of the show. The Trotter player, according to program plans, had a little disagreement with a young fan and was forced to produce his oversized boxing gloves to end the argument. When the Globetrotter put on his "gloves", there wasn't any question that the winner would be the fans.

A question did develop concerning the Trotters though, about the whereabouts of Meadowlark Lemon, the most famous Globetrotter of all time, recently retired. In an exclusive interview with Madisonian reporters Lisa Benham and Valerie Harness, Geese stated that he felt that Meadowlark's absence didn't affect the attendance at Trotters' games, but was positive that fans missed the zany antics of Lemon.

Geese, who has to be the most well-known Trotter playing along with Curly Neal and Marquis Haynes, stated that he would probably retire in two to three years, after two decades with the Globetrotters.

"I love the fans and I love making people laugh," added Geese.

The Globetrotters couldn't have done a better job at either. Students' positive reactions proved the team did just that.

Sophomore Ann Schlichte said, "I enjoyed the crazy things Curly Neal did; he's one of my favorite people. It's one game I'll never forget."

Rhonda Elston agreed she enjoyed the game very much, noting she saw them once before, but this time was "definitely more memorable."

When the Globetrotters come to town, a good time is guaranteed.

by Tom Anderson

Harlem Globetrotter Curly Neal struts in front of the crowd with the most important prop in his famous water trick. The famous team drew a crowd of nearly 5,000 for their fund-raising game.

The hook shot, formerly performed by Meadowlark Lemon, is done here by Geese Ausbie, with Curly Neal looking on. Meadowlark Lemon, the founder of H.O.R.S.E., recently retired.

BASKETBALL
ROUNDS

Getting the crowd into the act is a favorite ploy of the Globetrotters. Here, four-year-old Tommy Cheatham enjoys an "argument" with Geese Ausbie, who uses his oversized boxing gloves as "persuasion."

Providing a little halftime entertainment, Curly Neal plays Peek-a-Boo with other members of the Trotter team. Proceeds from the game went to aid the junior and senior high athletic programs.

GOAL TENDING! Harlem Globetrotter Geese Ausbie views the packed gymnasium while dominating the boards. The famous Trotter also commanded the "gag" aspect of the game which pleased many fans.

Swept off her feet for the final time, Lindy (Tracy Anderson) makes a joyful exit for the altar with her husband-to-be and life-time friend Jake (Randy Loken).

Simon (Brent Howell), the heart-throb of Fiona and the hench of Lindy, devotes his attention to listening to the woes of Lindy. Brent, who is a three year Drama Club member, held his first major role in the play.

The lone spectator in the auditorium, Mrs. Billie Means uses a critical eye to detect any weaknesses in character's performance at play practice. The 36 cast and crew members spent over 250 hours in practices.

Missing link triggers chain reactions

Finding the "missing Link" acted as Lindy Baxter's (Tracy Anderson) main hobby until she discovered that her beloved Link (Steve Cull) lived a cannibalistic life. In an effort to pinpoint the "real" character, 36 crew members entertained and amused fellow students and community patrons with their production of the "Missing Link".

The cast, comprised mainly of seniors, was chosen by Mrs. Billie Means, faculty director, and Marcia Vires, student director. Eleven students acted as characters while approximately 25 served as backstage help.

The 11 cast members—Tracy Anderson, Jan Wordlow, Kathy Peters, Brent Howell, Bill Goble, Cheryl Naylor, Randy Lakeman, Lisa Boley, Clara Willick, Steve Cull and Michelle Lewis plus the backstage crew of Brad Allen, Terri Gray, Mike Taylor, Melody Robinson, Loren Stewart, Duane Mason, Sally Tucker, Gregg Varble, Gregg Baxter, John Storm, Jodi Furnish and Teresa Sudlow performed their jobs in an "outstanding" manner, according to Mrs. Means. She added that the crew was "very outgoing, exciting people who were not only students but also friends". The drama advisor commented that the cast and crew were easy to work with because the majority were three year Drama Club veterans.

Cheryl Naylor, a new addition to the club, dramatically acted the role of Fiona who was deeply in love with her best friend's husband-to-be. Cheryl commented that the part was easy to play because "Fiona's a lot like me". Mrs. Means termed the Thespian member's portrayal as "also outstanding".

Together, the students contributed over 250 hours of practice to the success of the play. After their final performance, the participants celebrated with a cast party at Michelle's home. Disco lessons highlighted the party as everyone displayed his version of the latest dance.

The money earned from the comical mystery added to the Drama Club treasury which collects proceeds to improve the auditorium stage.

Amazed at his return after 30 years, Lindy waits for whom she believes is her beloved Link. Link's imposter, Ronce (Bill Goble) delights in the fact that his plan is actually working.

After a few drinks too many, Fiona (Cheryl Naylor) Lindy's best friend, cheerfully expresses her high spirits while Mrs. Baxter prepares her dress for the wedding.

Scott Freeman, Troy Hoffman, Keith Lunford and Rhonda Sedam show off their favorite concert shirts. The shirts become quite popular the morning after a popular group has been in the area, such as Freedom Hall.

Junior Rhonda Sedam and Keith Lunford express their music preference with t-shirts. Rhonda's favorite appears to be Rush, while Keith promotes the ever popular Kiss group.

Athletic shirts remain a popular item with most students. The halls are filled each day with shirts promoting Puma, Converse and Nike. Junior Mike Owens wears his Adidas shirt with pride.

New trends in t's take student body

Concert t-shirts brought to mind scenes of large smoky arenas full of cheering fans, plus recaptured the sweet smell of marijuana and the bright flashing light shows that highlighted all rock concerts.

The sign of an avid rock fan was the t-shirt that he bought at concerts. The shirt became a status symbol to the many students who enjoyed rock music.

All of these t-shirts, however, did not hold the same status. The prestige a shirt commanded depended on the popularity of the band and how many other students attended the same performance. Some of the most popular shirts came from concerts featuring REO Speedwagon, Cheap Trick, Styx, Van Halen, Kiss and the ever popular Rolling Stones.

The shirts came in a variety of styles. Some simply promoted the band's logo, while others were decorated with bright colors and glitter. They ranged from basic t-shirts to football-type jerseys.

Concert t-shirts, however, did not begin to dominate the t-shirt scene until students moved from the junior high to the high school.

Throughout the junior high years, the most prevalent shirt had been those promoting tennis shoe brand names such as Nike, Puma, Adidas and Converse. While this popular shirt did not die out completely on the high school scene, it was seriously hampered by the emergence of concert shirts as a trend.

Although concert shirts remained the most dominant, other types of shirts also enjoyed considerable attention. Weeks prior to the basketball sectional, Cub fans showed their loyalty with red and white jerseys purchased during a Letterman Club fund-raising campaign.

Another shirt included a "T" that reflected the emblem of a school, or some saying that supported the school. These usually were of colleges, with the most popular being Ball State, Indiana State or Indiana University. Students generally secured these shirts from older brothers or sisters attending that college, or purchased the shirts themselves as a souvenir of their visit there.

Some students who wished to protest a certain happening frequently got it off their chest in the form of a t-shirt. Anti-nuclear messages as well as political opinion often adorned the shirts of students who wished to get involved.

Of all shirts, concert shirts seemed to most accurately represent the atmosphere of what they stood for. When a person saw a concert shirt at school, it was a strong reminder of the many moments of pleasure spent at various concerts, often the night before.

by Curt Jacobs

"Do you think I'm sorry?" laughingly jokes Scott Freeman whose t-shirt promotes his favorite rock star Rod Stewart. Many students consider Stewart their favorite singer.

Sophomore Michele Taylor and senior Scott Lee choose to show their school spirit with t-shirts supporting the Cubs. Michele's shirt supports swimming, while Scott's boasts of the Cubs in general.

Sophomore Tommy Davis' shirt boosts the new fad of jogging that has swept the country recently. Many students used their shirts to express opinion, or promote social and political causes.

Seventh-semester graduate Becky Ford receives a special Christmas treat in the form of a cuddly stuffed animal, which she received during her final days at school before graduating.

Shari Wilson and Duane Mason dance to music from the Christmas opera "Amahl and the Night Visitor." The opera, performed by the Camerata, told the story of a poor crippled boy.

"It's just what I wanted!" Jill McDole opens a present before class on the final day before Christmas break. Jill's gift turned out to be a bottle of "Charlie" perfume from Mary Huib.

Aided by fellow friends Dede Alexander and Debbie Tipton, Cindy Barnes begins opening her presents. The girls, instead of throwing away the wrappings, chose to decorate themselves with the ribbons and bows.

Through an advertisement in the Madison Courier for a job as Santa Claus, Eric Jones disguised himself for the position as he helps Tina Scroggins entertain her son Mike with an electronic game, Simon.

Deanna Howell secures Jill Larimore's blindfold as Jill takes a swing at the candy-filled piñata. The Spanish class used a familiar Spanish custom to celebrate the holiday season.

Students 'exam'ine Christmas

Inventing diverse activities to occupy their long-anticipated Christmas vacation, students portrayed Santa Claus, caught the chicken pox and enjoyed winter sports. After final exams, students appeared ready to relax during the 17 day break. However, preparations for the holiday season started several weeks before the "big day." Ranging from the pine-scented Christmas tree in the lobby to the colorful cords and ribbons on lockers, students "decked the halls!"

Amidst strenuous semester exams, the final days before vacation overflowed with traditional "surprise" parties. French and German scholars enjoyed "cultural holiday experiences" through native dinners, while countless classes indulged in cake, cookies and candy canes all day long.

Student clubs and organizations aided in the spreading of holiday cheer throughout the school and community. Sunshine, Hi-Y, Student Council and VICA helped needy people celebrate Christmas with canned goods, presents and monetary gifts. Drama Club entertained children at the Ohio Theatre with "The Littlest Christmas Tree," with proceeds benefitting the Salvation Army. Members continued to capture the fascination of small children at the Tri Kappa Gingerbread House.

Sounds of Christmas music filled the air as musical ensembles caroled through downtown's Main Street. Combining their talents in presenting the annual Christmas concert, the concert band and choir treated their audience to a presentation of Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus." Camerata captured the spirit of Christmases past with the presentation of Olde English madrigal dinners, complete with food, costumes, decorations and entertainment of the day.

Students celebrated Christmas in varied ways, but most common customs involved family and friends. Attending midnight mass with a special friend on Christmas Eve provided moments to be remembered for junior Jay Brooks. Tim Fulton, senior, noted he enjoyed rabbit hunting with his father during Christmas.

Over the holiday break most students took advantage of free time to sleep late and indulge in extra activities. Senior Deni Hall noted she enjoyed ice-skating, although she spent more time sitting on the ice than skating. For those students who liked "dressing up," the annual Rainbow Dance offered couples the chance to hear the music supplied by the band Goliath.

Unfortunately a flu epidemic struck many students before and during the holiday season. Suffering with an attack of the chicken pox, senior Mark Klopp admitted this vacation was not his favorite.

Once again heading south, Madison students and families flocked to Florida in large numbers. Upon returning, students sported healthy tans and peeling noses.

The best part of Christmas vacation, according to sophomore Sally Henderson, was opening presents. Most students picked a favorite gift, but like many others, sophomore Tom Cooper felt the best present was "just stayin' out of school!"

Barkers shout, sing to earn extra cash

Camerata member Greg Giesler could see the dollars add up with each public performance. The musical ambassadors raised over $50,000 during their European tour which began the end of May.

Although fundraising generally benefitted the students themselves, several projects did not including the book drive for the Crawford County Library which was severely damaged by a July flood. Gloria DeBurger, Scott Miller, librarian, Mrs. Sherry Cook and LoisAnn Stockdale pack Madison's contribution in attempt to replenish the library's many volumes of lost books.

Using the colorful Christmas vom Sunshine sells annually in behalf of deprived and crippled children, Sharmy Anderson pretends she is a Christmas package for saleswoman Elvise Kloppe and Mary Aulick.

Buyers could not resist spending their dollars for the bright petunias and vining plants grown in the school greenhouses. Eddie Hall remembers the caring tips his biology teacher emphasized in class.

M CHS seemed like a circus arena at times, as student barkers roamed the school halls peddling the various goods their organizations had to sell in attempt to raise money for field trips and pleasure activities. Dollar-making projects ranged from popular candy sales, car washes to Renaissance dinners during the Christmas holidays.

The music department probably outsold its competitors in the arena. The Marching Cubs raised $7,400 towards their trip to Mexico by selling candy, sausage, cheese and Christmas ornaments. Camerata earned over $20,000 for its European trip through concession stands, madrigal dinners, a Christmas opera and a real down-home barbecue during the production run of "Oklahoma."

Sometimes clubs pooled their resources in order to canvas more territory. FHA, VICA and DECA raised over $12,000 together peddling a student favorite, chocolate candy.

In addition to the candy sales, FHA also washed cars and sold carnations on Valentine's Day which reaped two benefits ... extra cash for the club and special remembrances for sweethearts.

Much of the student fund-raising projects benefitted others, rather than the sellers themselves. Hi-Y made $145 for Cambodian refugees during the Hi-Y "Fast So Others May Feast" Day, plus earned $65 for the WHAS Crusade for Children with its "Give So Others May Live" project.

Sunshine too remembered the sick and afflicted, and sold Christmas wrapping and ribbons plus ran the concession stands at athletic events to help raise funds for charitable causes.

Still other ways remained to raise dollars. FFA sold fruit. The Lettermen sold Cub shirts and towels. The juniors sold magazines to finance the prom, and numerous bake sales provided tasty munchies throughout the year.

Now for a different kind of test. How well do you remember the past year?

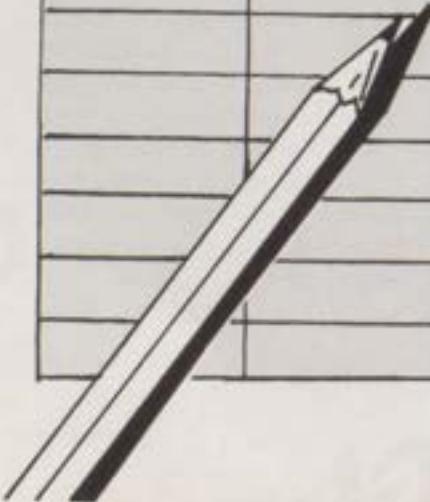

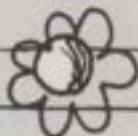

Check yourself by answering the following questions as you recall fond memories, and see if your year passes the "test."

PULLING UP ROOTS

"Who is that good lookin' fox?" "I've never seen that boy before!" "Is that the new girl?"

Walking down the halls at a new school, a new student often hears these and other whispered comments from fellow peers. For 25 new faces at MCHS, the beginning of a new year represented changes in friends, teachers and environment.

MCHS rates high in friendliness, according to Monte Osterman, a junior who transferred from Southwestern. "The first day here someone just came up and Moving often presented problems, as well as advantages. The most common disadvantage which faced newcomers appeared in the form of leaving friends. Theron, who has moved approximately 20 times, noted he has left friends behind many times, an action which he said can be "pretty bad."

Sandy agreed that having to make new friends and then leaving them can be upsetting. Both students noted they keep in touch with friends far away through letter-writing.

Another disadvantage pointed out by Sandy included getting acquainted with different streets, places to go and just knowing where one is. The volleyball player added, "Once you finally find out where things are, you move."

Despite the drawbacks caused by moving from place to place, several students noted positive effects of moving. Theron remarked he enjoyed meeting new people and learning about different ideas and customs. Making new friends ranked high on Sandy's list of advantages, although the Sunshine member disliked having to face new people. Sandy noted that discovering new lifestyles also intrigued her. The GAA participant experienced several different cultures while living 2.5 years in Pisa, Italy. During her stay in Italy, Sandy learned to speak both Italian and Spanish—a chance the average MCHS student does not have except through foreign language classes.

Comparisons are often made by a new student between schools attended before and the one presently enrolled in, according to past experiences and started talking to me," Monte explained, adding the atmosphere seemed different here, more warm.

Junior Theron Breland, who moved from Minnesota, smiled as he remembered talking to a person while sitting under a tree during lunch. "They just came up and talked to me," laughed the electronics enthusiast. Sophomore Becky Elsberry, a transfer from Georgia, agreed it was easy to get to know people here, that students were really "open."

However, a sophomore from South Carolina, Pam Amatucci, noted that while she sensed a friendly atmosphere, she still felt out of place at first, "especially at the first dance."

Another problem in getting acquainted, mentioned by Sandy McClure, a sophomore who has attended nine different schools, appeared in students' interests in "cliques." The sports enthusiast commented that once a person is seen with one student, he cannot enjoy the friendships of other groups.

personal opinions. Students new to the Madison school system listed both positive and negative sides to MCHS. A common dislike shared by several transfers included the apparent lack of school spirit. At her former school, noted Sandy, the pep rallies aroused more excitement and participation. "On spirit days," explained the sophomore, "we would paint our faces in the school colors and have spirit contests between teams and students."

tured the interest of students at Monte's former school. Students participated in such activities as Sucker Day by "carrying around big suckers and licking them all day," explained the band member.

Becky added that all football and basketball games were well-attended at her past school.

Another complaint echoed by new students pertained to the longness of the school day. Becky noted she preferred a 9-3 format utilized by her previous school. Starting the day at 9:20 and ending it at 2:30 also seemed to Theron a better arrangement, which was used by his past school.

Moving to MCHS brought a scheduling change to Theron as well as a change in school hours. His former school operated on a 24 minute mod schedule, with classes usually consisting of two mods. The music enthusiast commented he enjoyed this unusual schedule because during a "free" mod, students could leave campus to do what they wanted.

Junior John Bruns commented on the MCHS schedule also, preferring that of his old school. At Richmond all high school students were permitted to leave school early if they did not have a sixth period class—a privilege granted only to MCHS seniors.

A lack of school activities seemed a problem to Sandy, who noted she missed having teen clubs to go to after school.

John agreed that MCHS offered little excitement, but the basketball player noted, however, he enjoyed roaming around at lunch time and buying candy at the bookstore.

Changes in curriculum sometimes created problems for new students. After moving from a school with an enrollment of 1,300, but a less wide variety of classes, Becky noted her current Madison classes are harder than the ones she experienced at her old school. Pam agreed that she had to make more of an effort to keep up her grades here.

However, Monte, comparing experiences from his past school, noted that MCHS classes appeared easier because teachers explained subject matter more completely and stressed learning instead of just memorizing.

Not only did the type of school a student move to turn out to be important, but the type of town ranked important also. Becky mentioned since she enjoyed her new home and neighborhood, she adjusted more easily to her move to Madison. Monte continued the townspeople treated him with friendly interest, therefore making his move more comfortable. Living in a civilian town, instead of on an Army base for the first time, supplied Sandy with changes. The Pam listed the geographical location of Madison as a reason she liked moving here. Although the Drama Club member admitted missing living near the ocean, Pam exclaimed with a charming Southern accent, "I like the snow!"

Junior Monte Osterman engages in accompanying the band on the snare drums during a football game. Displaying an avid interest and devotion to music, Monte has played the drums for 10 years.

Breaking away

Like the young man in the movie, "Breaking Away," students continued to seek ways to get away from it all. Concerts, books, movies, fashion, records and television provided the best form of escape for the world of Gloomy lights off a haze of fog at the REO Speedwagon concert, spine tingling adventures in the Amityville Horror, the thrill of victory in Rocky II and cowboy boots served as escape outlets from the routine of school. Concerts, books, movies, fashion, television and radio kindled the blaze of "red hot entertainment."

Kentucky Fair and Exposition Center and Louisville Gardens set the stage for the most prominent concerts. The REO Speedwagon concert in September stood out the most in students' minds with their unique method of involving the audience and their Pink Panther theme promoting their new album "Nine Lives." Then one month later, the Molly Hatchet and Outlaws concert attracted numerous concert fans again. In November at Freed-dom Hall, Styx's Main Event more than satisfied its many followers with the introduction of two new songs.

But, of all the concerts the one that remained foremost in students' minds involved the Dec. 10 WHO concert at Cincinnati Riverfront Coliseum. In a human stampede of anxious fans, 11 were killed and eight injured due to the impatience of a crowd that had been waiting, some since one in the afternoon. This tragedy resulted from a number of factors with the main problem being that only 20 percent of the tickets sold were for reserved seats. Experts judged that the festival seating arrangement, a sort of first-come-best-seat system, invited the tragedy.

James Young of the musical group Styx throws back his head in an exuberant gesture that fires up the crowd. A lot of Madison students traveled to Louisville to see the rock group perform their popular song "Babe."

Senior Scott Miller said he felt that fans heard music and got panicky because they thought the concert had already started and they were getting "gipped." The reason so many were crushed, junior Tom Bear stated, was because they did not have big enough entrances to the arena. Sophomore Ann Schlichte commented that inadequate police control may have been the problem.

Beth Ricketts, another sophomore, summed up most everyone's feelings by saying, "It was terrible that people lowered their standards enough to destroy another person's life just to get into a rock concert."

A best seller that turned out to be a favorite among those students who marvel at the extraordinary and even those who do not was supposedly a true story about the possession of a house called "The Amityville Horror." The author Jay Anson wrote an account of the four weeks of terror experienced by an Amityville, Long Island family after moving into a house in which a particularly gruesome mass murder had once been committed.

Senior Shelly Anderson became so involved in the eerie tale that she said she dreamed of being stabbed, an incident that had occurred in the book.

ite of student movie buffs. Stallone portrays the boxer, Rocky Balboa, "The Italian Stallion" challenged again by the world champion, Apollo Creed. Except this time, Rocky wins.

Bette Midler depicted what seemed to be a Janis Joplin-type singer, in the movie, "The Rose." Midler, who slowly descends due to the effects of alcohol, drugs and men, played a rock star torn between fame and her love for Frederick Forrest, played by Houston Dyer.

Whether going to concerts, movies or school, fashion played an important role among students. Girls wore such combinations as Oxford cloth shirts, monogrammed sweaters, plaid pleated skirts, knee socks and suede saddle oxfords in assorted colors while others wore designer jeans, wrap belts, blouses with color coordinated ribbons, blazers with padded shoulders and a choice of Sebago "Dock Sides" shoes or cowboy boots. The boys kept their dress plain wearing Levi's jeans or corduroys with sweaters and Nikes, Converse, Puma or Adidas athletic shoes.

"Real People", a newcomer to the television screen, hosted by four humorous hosts, told and showed the lives, events, adventures, gifts and peculiarities of just as the name indicates real people. Some were strange, but still true to life.

Another new program which hit close to home with students due to its setting was "WKRP in Cincinnati." The show featured a radio station that switched from an easy listening to a rock station with disc jockeys who had such names as Dr. Johnny Fever and Venus Fly Trap, and starred the new, blonde, sex symbol, Loni Anderson, who played the station's receptionist.

A new radio station, KJ100 came into being last June and soon rated the No. 1 station in the 27 station-Louisville area, along with its popular DJ, Dave Hutcheson, who became a favorite among student listeners. "Hutch" helped wake up and get students' days started with 6-8 and 8-10 morning shows.

All these components, concerts, books, movies, fashion, television and radio unified to "fire up" students' lives. The elements helped make students' school and home lives a little brighter and brought about "the red hot entertainment" that each one enjoyed or sometimes needed.

A poster of "Bo and Luke Duke" invites a hearty chuckle from Lisa Boley. The zany pair appeared in the new television show "The Dukes of Hazzard," a favorite Friday night program along with "Dallas."

Whether it be a concert, a date or just talking in the library, students still dress in the latest styles. Angela Bough wears a blouse with a ribbon at the neck to complement her corduroy jeans; while David Dwyer sports a comfortable athletic outfit.

Rhonda Elston and Ross Teasley agree a blazer adds a touch of class to any outfit. A large portion of student paychecks generally went to buy fashion attire and coordinating accessories.

Tommy Simmonds takes note that "Kramer vs. Kramer" will begin at the end of the week. The film, which focused on the custody of a child in a divorce case, evolved as one of the hottest movies of the year.

Events

As the '78-'79 school year closed, few students visualized the chaos that would close the '70's and begin the '80's. No sooner did school end but the crash of a DC-10 aircraft in Chicago provoked a temporary grounding of all DC-10's. Independent truckers refused to make vital food and fuel deliveries, causing economic problems in 37 states. In Vienna, President Jimmy Carter and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev signed the SALT II treaty, which still awaits ratification by the senate.

In July, the space station Skylab finally broke apart, crashing to Earth amid a flurry of speculation and concern about where it would land. Despite the great metallic parts plummeting from the sky, no property damage or injuries occurred.

While talks for a Mid-East peace settlement continued, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Andrew Young, caused problems by secretly meeting with officials of the Palestinian Liberation Organization. The ensuing controversy led to his resignation and increased tension between blacks and Jews.

International tensions increased as the news of Soviet troops building up in Cuba broke. President Carter promised a severe American response—with no results. Meanwhile, the Western world grew concerned with the plight of the "boat people", Indochinese refugees escaping from the Vietnamese Communists, and the starving Cambodians who suffered under famine and Communist rule.

Pope John Paul II, however, supplied hope and faith with his October visit to Ireland and the United States. His American visit climaxed in a papal mass at the Washington Mall (despite atheist opposition) where he reaffirmed the Catholic position on family and sexual matters.

Soon afterwards, the ousted Shah of Iran, Mohammed Reza Pahlevi, entered the United States for cancer treatment. The Iranians saw this act as a hoax perpetrated by the Shah's U.S. backers to protect him from receiving justice. Therefore, encouraged by the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, hordes of Iranian students captured the U.S. embassy holding about 90 hostages on Nov. 4. Gradually, the students released hostages until they held 53.

In mid-December, the Shah left for Panama inspiring hopes for a quick end to the hostages' captivity. Despite the move of the Shah and visits from U.S. clergymen and investigative committees, the Persian radicals continued to hold the Americans. Iran's president Bani-Sadr also seemed helpful with the hostage situation through his moderate stand on the issues. Later in March, the Shah moved to Egypt for surgery and a possibly permanent residence. Iran vowed to take hostile actions against Egypt and threatened to try the hostages as spies.

Adding to the tensions of the hostage situation, Soviet troops invaded Afghanistan in late December, overthrowing its Communist puppet government. Despite a heavily armed Russian army and possible use of chemical warfare, Afghan Moslem patriots successfully kept the Soviets at bay. In a show of U.S. strength, President Carter ordered a cut of grain shipments to Russia, a boycott of the Moscow summer olympics, and possible draft registration for all young people, male and female. These moves disturbed farmers whose grain sales were affected, Olympics officials, U.S. athletes, tourists hoping to attend the games and draft opposers. As of March, 128 nations agreed to support the Olympic boycott.

Through the last months of '79 and the early months of '80, big business became tangled in governmental and legal trouble. Chrysler Motors, deeply in debt, wavered on the edge of bankruptcy and threatened the future of many jobs. After much heated debate, Congress voted to give Chrysler a federal loan, rescuing it from bankruptcy. Ford Motors went on trial for "negligent homicide" resulting from several deaths in an accident involving Ford's Pinto auto. These deaths allegedly resulted from faulty gas tanks which proved explosive. In a precedent-setting case, the court declared the auto manufacturer not guilty. This decision provoked complaints from consumer advocates such as Ralph Nader who charged that vital evidence proving Ford's guilt was withheld in the trial.

In January, the Canadian government won the gratitude of many Americans when it aided six U.S. citizens, who escaped from the Iranian embassy during its takeover, in returning to America. However, in February, Columbian leftists took over the Dominican Republic's embassy. Although many hostages were later released, the kidnappers still kept some to hold until their demand of releasing 20 political prisoners was met.

While the United States planned to boycott the summer olympics, the winter games at Lake Placid, New York, resulted in several great victories for the American athletes. U.S. skater Eric Heiden emerged victorious as he won five gold medals in the speed-skating events. The American hockey team began the competition by tying with Sweden, but went on to defeat Czechoslovakia, Norway, Romania, Poland and, in the greatest victory of all, Russia.

If international tensions were not bad enough, Andrew Young's replacement, U.N. Ambassador Donald McHenry voted for a U.N. resolution condemning all "illegal" Israeli settlements, including Jerusalem. Despite the Carter administration's claim that the vote resulted from a breakdown in communications, Israeli officials, American Jews and other sympathetic American citizens remained upset over what may have signaled an official change in U.S. foreign policy.

The presidential elections probably equaled the Iranian crisis in newsmaking. According to some political analysis, the election results may hinge on events in the hostage situation. President Carter's popularity in the polls rose as a result of his handling of the problem. Sen. Edward Kennedy, another Democratic candidate, was said to have lost political support after he criticized U.S. support of the Shah. Conservative Ronald Reagan led the Republican primaries but faced occasionally strong opposition from moderate George Bush and liberal John Anderson. The other candidates—Democrat Jerry Brown and Republicans John Connelly, Robert Dole, Howard Baker, and Phil Crane, pulled out of the race after the first few primaries.

In late '79, the discovery of a crime that shocked the nation emerged from Illinois. John Wayne Gacy, who once entertained neighborhood children as a clown, was convicted and sentenced to death for murdering and molesting 30 young men and boys. Meanwhile, Steven Judy of Indianapolis was convicted of murdering a woman and her two children. He too received the death sentence. Both men remain in jail awaiting execution.

While many celebrities and newsmakers died in the past year, the media highlighted the more famous ones. John Spengler, executed by electric chair on May 25 in Florida, rocketed to short-lived fame as the first man involuntarily executed since 1967. Conductor Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops Orchestra and John "The Duke" Wayne died in July. President Eisenhower's widow, Mamie, and the last Marx Brother, Herbert "Zeppo", passed away in November.

Composer Richard Rodgers, former partner of Oscar Hammerstein II, died in December. Vaudeville and Broadway star Jimmy Durante, film star David Janssen, and Jay "Tonto" Silverheels left the film world in February. Jesse Owens, the black track star of the 1936 Munich Olympics, died in March.

Students varied in their views about the importance of news happenings. Juniors Bill Goble and Beth Brietweiser and senior Neal Lyle agreed that the most important event was the Iranian crisis as world peace hinged on its results. Senior Jay Simmons said the Mid-East peace treaty was important for bringing divided nations together. Sophomore Todd Thorne stated the energy crisis ranked as the top event as it affected everybody. Despite the tensions, dangers and controversy of the past year, the hope for peace survived with the Mideast peace negotiations and the unification of Americans during the Iranian crisis. Whether students were touring a foreign country or swimming in the ocean, they were . . .

Long-awaited spring break finally arrived, releasing students from the pressures of school for a week. For many fortunate students, spring break allowed them to "get away from it all" as they traveled to exciting places.

Flying across the Atlantic Ocean to tour Germany and France provided many thrills for 25 German and French students. German students had the opportunity to try their German in Heidelberg, Innsbruck and Munich, while French students tested their language skills around Paris.

Seeing famous sights contributed to Helen Lyons' enjoyment of her French trip. Helen said she especially enjoyed walking up the first stage of the famed Eiffel Tower.

For several German students seeing the Olympic ski jump and torch at Innsbruck and skating at the Olympic ice arena at Munich created lasting memories. Bard Lowery, laughingly noting the "die Deutsche Madchens" seemed the best part of his trip, added he enjoyed a night at the famous Hofbrau Haus. Lisa Chamberlain, taking advantage of the Austrian Alps, received her first ski lesson at Innsbruck. Reflecting on her trip, the junior exclaimed, "I had the best time I have ever had in my life!"

While some students were skiing in the Alps, numerous other students hit the sun-warmed Florida beaches. Groups of mostly senior girls and guys reserved plane tickets and hotel reservations back in September for their long anticipated week of sun 'n fun in Florida. Senior Dianna Mundt noted the nine girls in her group headed for the beaches at eight in the morning, and remained until four in the afternoon. Sophomore Beth Johnson, who traveled to Florida with her parents, said she took advantage of the sunny weather to play tennis and to go swimming. The Florida travelers were easily spotted in school with their tanned and peeling faces, often wearing T-shirts proclaiming, "I survived spring break at Daytona Beach!"

Gloria Kittle and Michele Horine also enjoyed sunny beaches, but these beaches lay on the California coast. The trip, a Christmas gift for Gloria, included visiting San Francisco, Santa Cruz, Monterey, Los Angeles and San Diego. Gloria noted she loved riding the trolley cars and touring Universal Studios.

The West also beckoned Julia Vaughn and her family. Visiting her sister at the University of Arizona, Julia got a taste of Greek life while staying at her sister's sorority house. Julia noted the trip was fun, except for the time their car had a blowout in the middle of the desert. The worst part, according to Julia, occurred when a "Hell's Angel guy" came to help them. Julia noted everything turned out fine, however.

Remaining closer to home, FCA and MYF members visited Taylor University for the Youth Annual Conference. MYF member Mark Horine said he enjoyed the "Mud Olympics" the most. The games included three-legged races, spoon relays and an obstacle course. For the obstacle race, team members, with all their ankles tied together, stumbled through the mud toward the finish line.

"It was hilarious," laughed the sophomore.

Whether or not students traveled or remained at home, most agreed spring break was great.

Bathing beauties Susan Hill, Lisa Benham and Becky Hall exchange bits of gossip while sunning in the Florida surf. All three girls arrived home with beautiful bronzed bodies after a week on the beach.

Michele Horine and Gloria Kittle get more than they bargained for as they get hugged by a furry creature. The girls met up with many interesting sights while touring Universal Studios.

Off the bus... on the road

Through soaring insurance rates and the unbelievable price of $1.25 per gallon for gasoline, the wheels kept on rolling.

Annual insurance rates of $400 to $450 and outrageous gas prices should have affected the number of students who drove to school, but what should have been and what developed resulted in two different stories.

More than 40 percent of the students drove to school. The American love affair with the car remained alive and well.

Many students experienced anxious days of waiting before they possessed their license, anticipating the day when they could cruise to school in their very own wheels.

Halfway through the school year, the number of cars in the student parking lot gradually increased as the sophomores matured, slowly but surely to the much awaited age of 16.

The "Big Yellow Bus" then passed quietly into oblivion, because everybody knew the bus ran just for "little" kids. Adults drove to school.

A few of the "yellow paddy wagons" still existed for the younger people and for those unfortunate souls who suffered automotive problems.

The "dream car" of the school year seemed to be anything but a car. Four-wheel-drive trucks and vans seemed to be the "in" thing; sports cars had to take a back seat.

Many people would not accept that fact, however, because as senior Tim Sauley puts it, "A Z-28 Camaro is the only vehicle worth owning."

Motorcycles also remained popular, weather permitting, of course. Senior Randy Greves expounded on motorcycle riding as an art, not a hobby, which many people didn't understand. They did not know the feeling of the wind rushing through the hair and the power of all those "horses" beneath them, he added.

Hand-me-down cars also became a common occurrence. Junior Jackie Ward for one drove a 1969 Cougar that was previously owned by her older sister and brother. "We'll keep on using it until it blows up or rusts away—whichever comes first," added Jackie.

"Let's go four-wheelin'" echoed through the hills as students chose to go off the conventional roads and make their own, curving up hills, roaring through streams and swamps, covering their vehicles with mud and grime.

"I got really bored of the same old highways, so I decided to go someplace the roads don't take me, up the hills and through the fields," claimed junior John Ferrell, who maintained he enjoyed the freedom of off-road driving and motorcycle riding.

Through thick and thin, mud and dirt, rain or shine, soaring gas and insurance costs, the wheels of MCHS kept on rolling through it all.

Tom Kidwell and John Ferrell, both juniors who enjoy each other's company, also enjoy climbing the hills around Madison in John's four-wheel-drive Scout. Many enjoyed this sport.

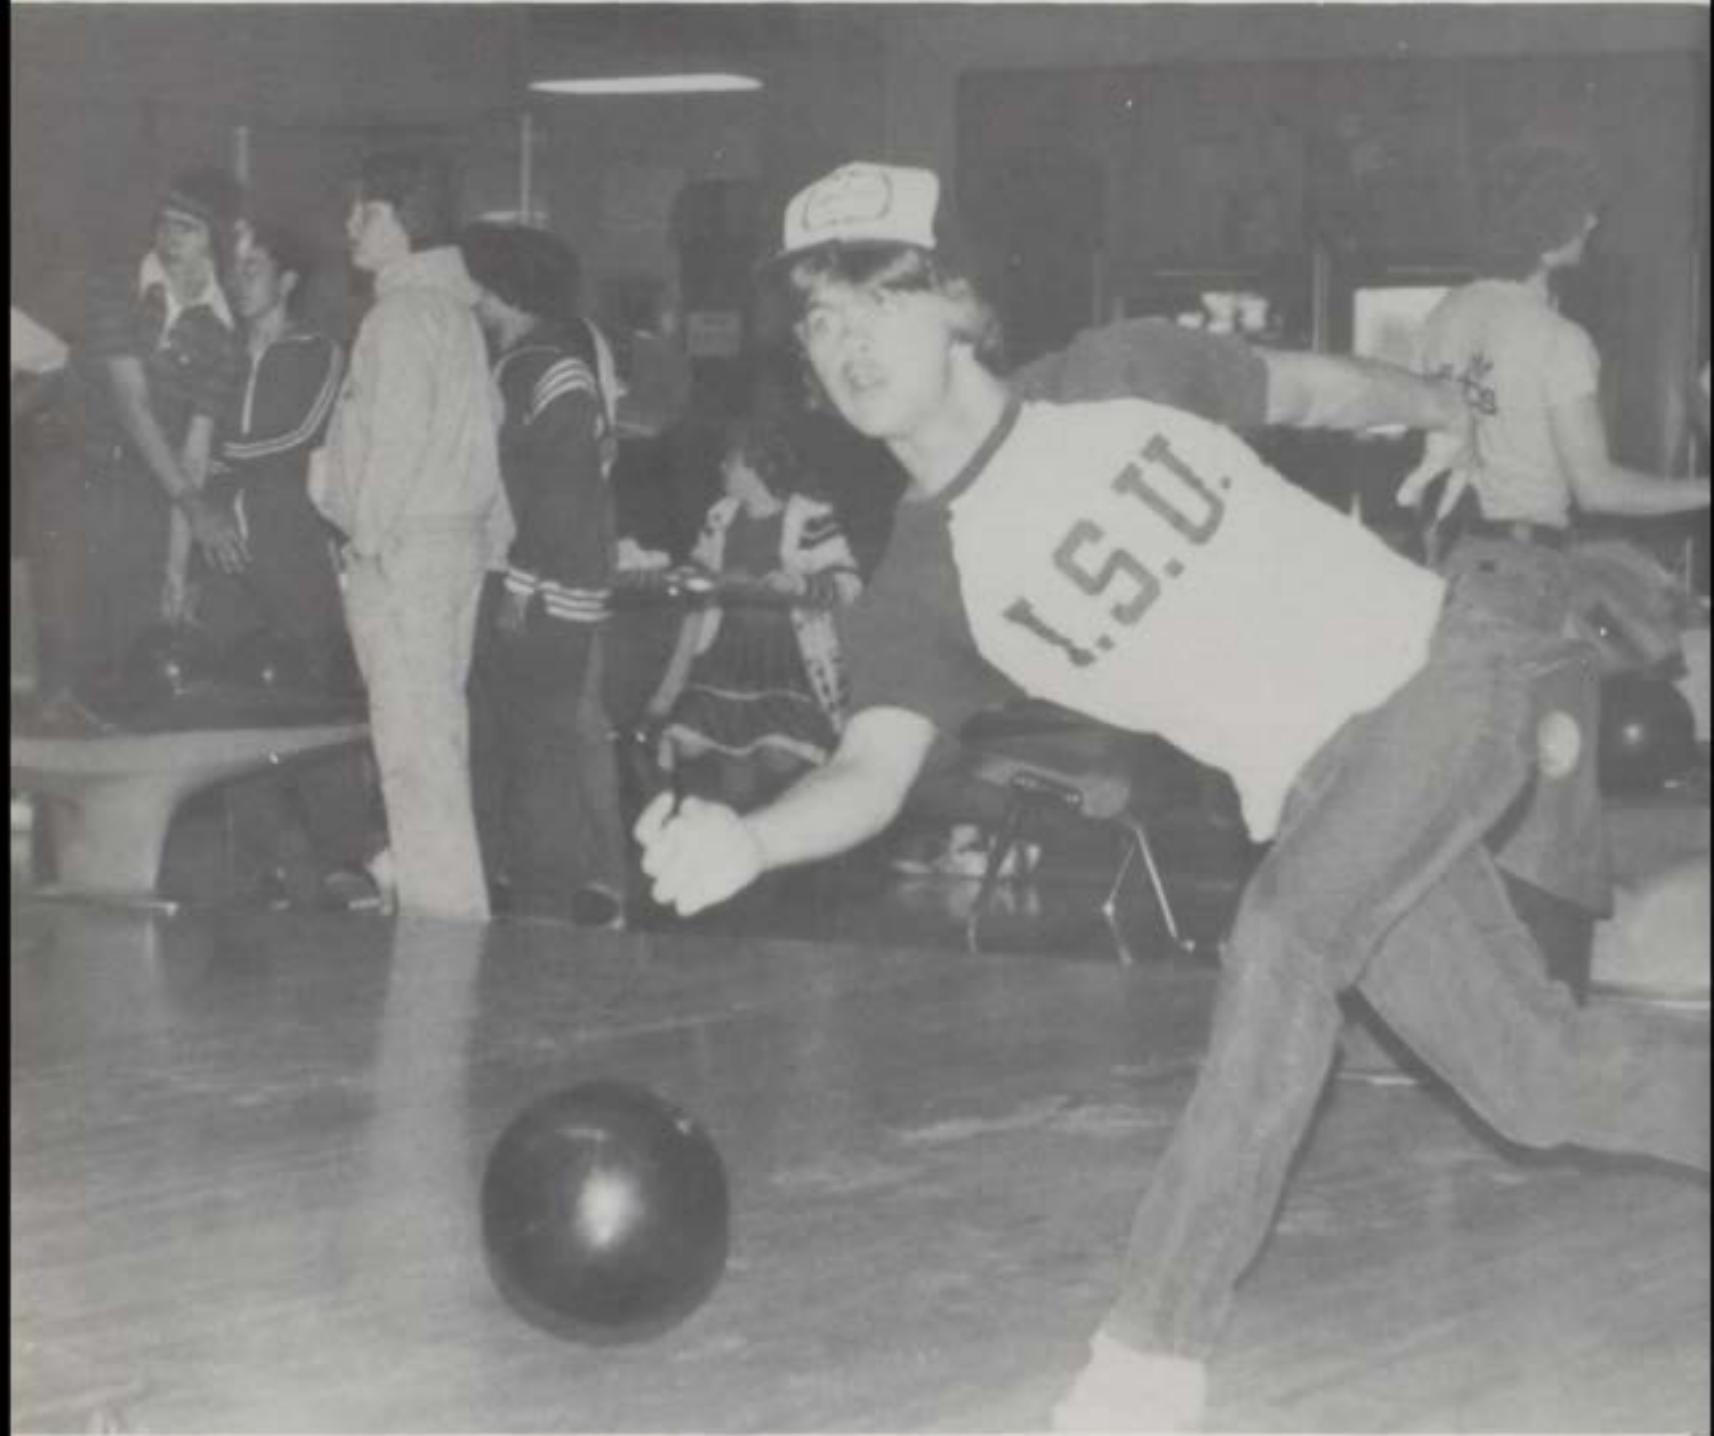

The RACE IS ON! Everyday at 3:30, students head for their cars. Senior Denise Hromnick and junior Kathy Morgan lead the pack of students heading for their cars after a long day of school.

Senior DeWayne Perry smiles while he unlocks his customized van. Who would not smile if they were driving a 1977, $6,000 vehicle? DeWayne says his van is a big asset for socializing.

Non-varsity sports gain in popularity

Students occasionally abandoned their traditional red and white Cub jackets in exchange for insignia proclaiming the Pin Splitters, the Lakers or Dupont Feed Mill, as they participated in church and city athletic leagues.

Area ball parks, the Brown Gym and the local bowling alley frequently overflowed with non-varsity athletes and their strong following of fans.

Similar to the Indiana High School Athletic Association, each league sponsored championship tournaments which created a few bets sometimes and lots of bragging and hoping as each team anticipated a victory.

The most popular attractions involved the city basketball and softball leagues, the church softball leagues and Saturday morning bowling.

The competition attracted both varsity and non-varsity participants when state athletic rules allowed. Many of the non-varsity players preferred this type of interaction, because of their part-time jobs they held after school prohibiting them from regulated practice.

But unlike the state athletic associations, which required licensed referees, peers and fans frequently affiliated, which sometimes created as much interest as the game.

Because of this expanding interest in non-varsity sports, on both the teen and adult level, several community and governmental leaders attempted to arouse interest in building a community athletic arena on the state hospital grounds.

An all-year round athlete, Heidi Leon participates in summer softball action. Heidi also played on the high school varsity volleyball, basketball and tennis teams which achieved impressive records this year.

Linda Bird feels confident she can make it on time. Numerous high school boys and girls played on city and church league teams, which also attracted a large number of adult players.

Matt Webster realizes a bowler's position plays an instrumental part in ball control. Matt, like many of the bowling enthusiasts, also participated in city basketball action during the winter months.

The announcement, "Convocation today, shortened fifth and sixth periods," guaranteed a smile from most students yearning a break from classes.

A concert by Freefare captured the approval of most students. The group performed music from Styx, Kansas, Ted Nugent and Star Wars. The similarity of this performance to a live concert caused Ron Dunbar, like many others, to prefer this convocation. Musician Mr. Frederick Schuurman presented another type of musical program, featuring folk songs and ballads.

Students also were exposed to the mysteries of ESP during a performance by psychic Mr. Davis D'Paul. With the aid of assistants Lee Ann McKay, Bard Lowry and Beth Elston, Mr. D'Paul conducted successful experiments in mind-reading.

Hi-Y again sponsored the annual Thanksgiving convocation with the presentation of guest speaker Mr. Myron Davis, son of faculty member Mrs. Marjorie Davis.

The school music and drama departments also provided entertainment. The Drama Club presented two matinee productions, the all-school play, "The Missing Link," and the Variety Show. Displaying their musical talents, the Camerata and jazz band performed before the student body. Talented students sang and danced in the musical "Oklahoma!"

Pep sessions provided time for students to relax and display school enthusiasm. Humorous skits presented by spirited students boosted spirit. The basketball team evoked loud laughs as they raced to unroll rolls of toilet paper around themselves. Class spirit flew high at pep session preceding the Southwestern game. Juniors won the spirit award with a skit mocking the Rebels. The song "King Tut" took on a new meaning during the senior skit which followed the antics of several sophomore girls. These activities made school more bearable!

America's No. 1 fad

Junkfood, along with hiking boots and disco music, drained many piggy banks while students found enjoyment in the simple pleasures of the school year.

Popular candies such as Reese's Cups, M&M's and Snickers satisfied most students until the noon hour when hot sandwiches and milk shakes became available in the cafeteria.

Wendy's, Hardee's and Mr. Gatti's came to town expanding the restaurant and fast food franchises to well over 45 in Madison.

McDonald's and Wendy's drew most students into their food domains with their mouth-watering Big Macs and Frosties.

Though the junkfood diet quenched hunger for a while, it also proved costly on the average teenage wallet. A Big Mac from McDonald's sold for 99 cents while the Top Chef from Burger Chef reached the $1.69 mark.

Soda drinks ranked high on the students' list of enjoyment. Quarters and dimes dropped through the Coke machines from early morning until late evening, serving each person with the refreshing "drink of life."

The school bookstore offered a wide variety of goodies, ranging from sweet-tarts to Reese's pieces, in order to make the school a more pleasant place to be. Getting to the bookstore to stock up on supplies often appeared more important than getting to class on time.

Twinkies, ice-cream and Captain Crunch fit well into a night of cramming for tests, although a test could spoil the true quality of a good down-to-earth snack.

Adults often questioned the nutritional value of teenage eating habits, and there was only one way to be sure. If mom never bought it, and one had to hide to have his Heath, then it probably fell into the junkfood category.

Mrs. Helen Freeman, bookstore manager, noted M&M's definitely was the best selling candy in the whole bookstore.

Anytime is time for a snack. Just ask junior Mark Horine. He is even willing to put Hardee's roast beef sandwich up against his grandma's apple pie! Can you believe that?

"We sell over four cases a week which averages about 1500 packs," noted the study hall monitor. Snickers rated a close second on the best-sellers list of sweets.

Several people noted a sizeable portion of their weekly income went to the junkfood cause.

Senior Kim Miller—After the weekend is over it's about $5.

Mr. Jim Lee—I spend exactly 40 cents a day five days a week at the bookstore.

Sophomore Elyse Klopp—About $6, or maybe a little more.

Senior Tommy Anderson—$20 easy.

The newly formed academy, Junkfood is United Nationwide for Families Of Obese Descendants, gladly welcomed America's youth into the No. 1 fad everywhere, J-U-N-K-F-O-O-D!!!

Nobody can do it like McDonald's can .

OPEN WIDE . . . Junior Jay Brooks and sophomore Karla Miller find the local Burger Chef offers them the perfect meal to quench the hunger pains after a long day of school.

Make-up time! Sophomore Sarah Melton applies a little blush to touch up freshman David Buchanan's face while waiting for his stage call in the "Oklahoma!" performance.

'Oklahoma!' charms audience's hearts

A decade after its first showing in Opal Sherman Auditorium, Rodger's and Hammerstein's "Oklahoma!" captivated its audience just as much if not more than in its first presentation in 1970. Under the direction of Mr. Phillip Cooper, the cast led by seniors Jay Simmons and Kandy Ashcraft sang and danced their way into the audiences' hearts with such favorites from the play as "Oh What A Beautiful Morning," "People Will Say We're In Love," "Surrey With The Fringe On Top," "I Cain't Say No," and of course the musical's theme "Oklahoma!"

"Oklahoma!" which made its debut on Broadway in 1943, was chosen as this year's musical due to its recent comeback on Broadway and also because of the great potential found in Madison's student body, stated Mr. Cooper.

The musical, a combined effort of faculty members as well as students, starred not only Jay as Curly and Kandy as Laurey but also seniors Jo Fairchild as Aunt Eller, Jon Wardlow as the cowpoke Will Parker, Duane Mason as the peddler man Ali Hakim, Tracy Anderson as Gertie Cummings, the girl with the horse laugh, juniors Greg Giesler as Jud Fry (the villain), the comical Lisa Boley as Ado Annie, the girl who "cain't say no", and even Mr. Cooper himself as Ike Skidmore.

Mr. John Schreiber directed the 16 member pit orchestra with Miss Myra Laughlin as piano accompanist while Mr. Bill Lindquist remained behind the scenes making sure all props and scenery were properly placed.

Seniors Jay Simmons and Kandy Ashcraft seem in some sort of daze as they portray Laurey's dream of her marriage to Curly in the April 11 performance of Rodger's and Hammerstein's "Oklahoma!"

"Oklahoma . . ." happily sings Jay Simmons (Curly), Kandy Ashcraft (Laurey) and the rest of the cast shortly after the couple's wedding at the conclusion of the musical production.

Trombone players Cathy Pedigo and Keith Hastings pay careful attention to their music as Mr. John Schreiber directs the 16 member pit orchestra during the intro to the musical.

Bill Goble parades to the front of the stage while singing "The Farmer and the Cowman" in "Oklahoma." The father of Ado Annie, "Carnes" defends the farmers' rights against the cowboys.

Seemingly practicing his villainy a little early, junior Greg Giesler playfully jokes around with fellow cast members Teresa Sudlow and Sarah Melton backstage before their Friday night performance.

Junior Lisa Boley (Ado Annie) carefully counts and ponders over a mind boggling problem while senior Jon Wardlow (Will Parker) looks at her with frustration while he waits for an answer.

Overflowing with song, Jay Simmons [Curly] belts out the musical's theme "Oklahoma!" which became a favorite of the audiences as well as the lead character and cast at the conclusion of the production.

Director Phillip Cooper, a make-up expert due to his many years of experience, works at trying to make senior Jo Fairchild look elderly for her role as Aunt Eller in "Oklahoma!"

production together, practiced long hours during the short span of time and especially on dancing which played an important part in the musical, according to Mr. Cooper who also choreographed the play.

The set for the musical, designed by Mr. Roger Combs, took the viewer to the prairies of Oklahoma and the costumes rented from Metro park/Act One in Louisville set the audience in a different time zone.

The old fashioned love story takes place in the Indian territory now called Oklahoma just after the turn of the century and involves two young sweethearts, Curly and Laurey, who never really admit to loving each other until Jud Fry, a hired hand on Laurey's farm also takes an interest in Laurey. His evil ways cause Laurey to turn to Curly in fear.

Laurey not quite knowing how to deal with the situation with Curly and Jud but positive of her love for Curly dreams of her marriage to Curly. The dream, however, turns into a nightmare when Jud enters the picture and after a skirmish with Curly, kills him. This particular part of the production rated a favorite with the audience due to its authenticity by the use of low, blue lights, dry ice which caused a cloudy appearance across the stage and the actors moving in slow, bionic-like motion.

Due to Laurey's hatred of Jud, she fires him and three weeks later marries Curly. On the same day Jud returns to kill Curly but is instead murdered himself when Curly kills him in self-defense. Now that the villain is dead, Curly, Laurey and everyone else live happily ever after.

Faculty members chose Rhonda Elston, Twyla Scudder and Shari Wilson as Girls State delegates, with alternates being Cheryl Naylor, Susan Thurnall and Clara Willick.

Mr. Dick Craft, counselor, noted the winners would attend the American Legion Auxiliary sponsored seminar at Indiana State University in June.

Requirements for Girls State stipulated that the recipient must be in the top one-third of her class, express an interest in government and history, show outstanding character and leadership abilities and be interested in people and public speaking.

According to Mr. Jerry Dugan, senior Scott Freeman ranked 25th in a state mathematics contest, becoming the second MCHS student ever to achieve this distinction.

The math teacher stated that as a school Madison ranked in the upper one-fourth of competing schools.

He noted only six other Southern Indiana schools scored higher than Madison.

The top three scorers from a high school entered their scores as a team tally, thus allowing for the ranking of the 125 competing Indiana schools.

MCHS's top three team scores belonged to Scott, Mike Henderson and Aza Shumate and Greg Varble, who tied for third.

Linda Bird, Cathy Thorpe, Jean Will, Rhonda Elston and Tracy Henry took fifth place in the Ethel Plock Olympic Skills Contest at Spencerian Business College in Louisville.

Twenty-nine schools in Kentucky and Indiana participated in the shorthand, accounting and typing contests.

Jean placed second in the shorthand junior division and received a $50 bond.

Senior Lisa Benham gained state recognition by receiving the Indiana State Daughter of the American Revolution Good Citizen citation.

The Madisonian editor then became eligible for national honors through the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

At the state meeting she accepted a $100 bond and was selected the state winner over local DAR Good Citizens from 111 DAR chapters. Later, she finished second in the nation.

Mrs. Sarah Smith, Mrs. Billie Means and Mr. Bill Lindquist's senior composition Literature classes combined efforts to produce the annual Comp-Classics, literary publication, focusing on the theme "Thoughts of the '80's." Cindie Underwood designed the cover.

Seniors Maria Scott and Jon Wardlow were named finalists in the twenty-fifth annual Merit Scholarship competition, qualifying them for scholarship eligibility.

They qualified as semifinalists by high scores on their PSAT/NMSQT test scores. To become finalists they had to have their test scores verified, submit additional information as well as endorsements.

Over 1.1 million students enrolled in about 18,000 high schools throughout the U.S. entered the merit program.

Both Maria and Jon ranked in the top 10 of the senior class of 342.

The junior magazine sales netted $9,740 worth of magazines according to Mr. Dick Craft, junior class advisor.

Wanda Wentworth became the highest seller bringing in $380.

The other top salesmen included Tommy McCord, $273, and Cheryl Naylor, $205.

Senior Tina Scroggins, escorted by Tim Furnish, became MCHS's 1979-80 Miss Cub, during a high spirited game against Franklin.

Other Miss Cub candidates and escorts included Lisa Benham and Rick Hart; Carla Eades and Sam Zelony; Kathy Love and Jay Copeland; Laura Parker and Dewayne Perry; Jean Will and Scott Miller.

The alternates for the American Legion sponsored seminar included Tom Bear and Greg Giesler.

Junior Clara Willick participated in two speech contests this school year taking high ranks in both competitions.

In the first event, sponsored by the American Legion, Clara focused her presentation on "Obligation To Vote" explaining why citizens should vote. With that speech she came home with first place in school competition and second in district.

The position included Dennis as superintendent of water; Mike—mayor; Deni—city attorney; Beth—clerk treasurer; Lisa—chief of Police.

During Student Government Day the students observed and aided the officials with their daily responsibilities.

Mrs. Sarah Smith, program leader of language arts, noted the winners of the American Education Week Essay contest, titled "Educating all the Children," included Lisa Calvin, senior; Gary Hubbard, junior; and Derin Lowry, sophomore.

Principal Bill Rector awarded certificates and dictionaries to each of the winners.

Throughout the many Custer contests held at MCHS, this year's seemed to be one of the most memorable with the top winner being Lisa Benham, class valedictorian, and Jon Wardlow, class salutatorian, placing second.

Lisa's performance of "The Fall of the House of Usher" by Edgar Allan Poe kept the audience in suspense, while Jon's presentation of Hilda Guldseth's "Breathes There a Man" bestowed a feeling of sorrow and sadness for the "Man" not able to even hear about his country, 'America'.

Other participants in the 69th annual event who received equal rank of third, comprised Deni Hall, who presented Edgar Allan Poe's "The Pit and the Pendulum"; Kyle Shadday, who presented Robert Newman's "The Button" and Greg Varble, who delivered William Shakespeare's "I Was Alone."

The annual oratorical event is open to the five seniors with the highest grade averages.

The winner received $100, second $75 and the remaining three $50 each.

Part I: Anticipation

The prom—the perfect dress, matching tux, dazzling decorations—results from hard work and thoughtful preparation. The junior class, traditional prom hosts, prepared for the event months ahead of time. Way back at the beginning of school, juniors participated in magazine sales, raising funds for prom and graduation. In January, prom committee sign-up sheets were passed out in junior classes, with committees listed two weeks later.

The first one to meet, the band committee, decided the choice of band. Headed by Rhonda Elston, the committee chose the group Tyler.

The theme and decorations committee, under the direction of Kim Williams, began meeting in March. The committee, which can "make or break the prom" according to junior class president Twyla Scudder, chose the theme, the colors, the decorations and did the decorating.

Committees organizing the election of king and queen and deciding the sophomore servers met in mid-April. The refreshment committee also made its choices at that time.

Having selected the invitations in early April, the committee addressed and distributed the announcements two weeks before prom night.

As plans for the prom continued, students began anticipating the upcoming event. But before one could make plans, he had to have a date. For those couples "going together," the problem was solved. However, others were not so lucky. Guys nervously asked for a date as girls sweated it out waiting for a special guy to call. More courageous girls decided not to wait—they did the asking. Several students decided to save some money and went "stag."

The next step took some time to accomplish—finding the "perfect" dress. Many girls shopped out of town, looking for a dress no one else would have. Some solved the problem by having an obliging mother or friend make their dress.

The time then came to select a suit or tux. Most couples, renting tuxes from local stores, looked through catalogs and decided the style and color together.

Selecting the flowers finished the list of pre-prom activities. Girls decided on corsages and nosegays, choosing matching boutonnieres for their dates.

Finally everything was ready. Now, if only prom night would hurry up and arrive!

Tim holds still as a sales clerk takes his measurements. Tim decided to beat the rush and ordered a tux a month before the prom. Tim also looked for a white top hat but was unable to find one in town.

Working at home finishing her dress, Twyla positions the material on the sewing machine. With the aid of her sister and sister-in-law, Twyla's dress was completed in two weeks.

"Well, do you like it?" Twyla questions Tim as he looks at her choice. Twyla, however, chose not to buy that dress and after looking through racks of formals decided to have her dress made.

Part II: Participation

Finally, the big night arrived—prom night. Along with the excitement came an abundance of rain, and then more rain. Umbrellas became customary gear for protection from the gusting wind and sheeting rain. Lacy ruffles and hem at the bottom of long formals grew mud-splattered from wet puddles. But the rain was soon forgotten as the long-awaited night progressed.

Dinner at one of the "fancier" restaurants in town usually started the night for most couples, while some enjoyed special meals at their date's homes. Most of the nervousness wore off by the time dinner was over, unless something catastrophic had happened such as dropping a fork.

After dinner, some attended pre-prom parties, while others headed for the Moose Lodge, which as in the past, held the prom. The hardworking efforts of the juniors to change the Moose into a festive setting were rewarded for as couples entered the main room it was easy to forget where they were.

Walls were covered with shimmering silver streamers and the ceiling sported twisted silver and blue streamers. Providing "atmosphere", candles glowed from colored glass bowls on the tables. Feathered table decorations, light blue napkins, goblets and programs on every table provided other take-home momentos.

From the look of the crowded dance floor, the Tyler Band seemed excellent entertainment. Couples danced, "twisted" and slow-danced all night after the first brave couples broke the ice.

As the air turned stuffy and guys started to shed heavy jackets, attention turned toward the refreshment bar. Prom servers Angela Baugh, Elyse Klopp, Beth Johnson, Jodi Furnish, Sally Henderson, Russell Sullivan, David Dwyer, Darin Lowry, Tim Breeding and Jeff Everidge helped supply hungry people with cake, chips, fruit and punch. The servers, selected by a committee, were responsible for greeting arriving guests.

For many, a highlight of the evening took place at the presentation of the new prom king and queen. Last year's king and queen, Brent O'Neal and Susie Callis, crowned Leanna Taylor and Rick Hart at midnight. Selected by the junior and senior class, the two danced to the theme song, "Free Bird." Lisa Benham, Nancy Craig, Beth Elston, Heidi Ison, Laura Parker, Randy Greves, Randy Johann, John McIntire, Dewayne Perry and Sam Zelony comprised the prom court.

As the hour one approached the crowd began thinning. But the night for most was just beginning. The afterprom was held again at Trinity Methodist Church. After shedding their formal wear for comfortable jeans and tennis shoes, couples enjoyed music by Night Sky, playing ping-pong and pool, eating hamburgers and other refreshments and just relaxing.

After the afterprom, some worn out couples headed home for a decent night's sleep, while others partied on until dawn. Private parties and early breakfasts put the finishing touches on what senior Cathy Chilton termed "the best prom ever."

A TOUCH OF MAGIC

Magic tricks from the valedictorian and a gift for a senior "super-star" added a special spark on Honors Day for the first graduating class of the eighties. Valedictorian Lisa Benham, using wands and colorful scarves, held the attention of all during her remarks.

Basketball All-Star Carla Eades received a specially designed clock, presented by Shelly Anderson, Becky Hall and Heidi Ison. Carla's classmates displayed their appreciation for her school and sport accomplishments by applauding her with a standing ovation.

Carla was just one recipient of over 200 awards and scholarships presented to the seniors. Local and state organizations awarded sizeable scholarships to deserving students. Tri Kappa sorority presented grants totaling $4,100 to 11 graduates. The Lotz scholarships, presented to the top 22 college-bound seniors, again were handed out by retired Madison Bank and Trust Co. employee Mr. Wiley Riedel, famous for his crowd pleasing antics.

Many seniors with memorable personality traits received superlatives for their unique and pleasing ways. Recipients included Susan Hill and Sam Zelony, best dressed; Heidi Ison and John Storm, friendliest; Stephanie Humes and Brady Gruemmer, most unpredictable; Maria Scott and Jon Wardlow, most likely to succeed; Tina Scroggins and DeWayne Perry, cutest; Shelly Anderson and Tim Furnish, withest; Nancy Craig and Scott Ellis, best figure and build; Kelly Joyce and Troy Hoffman, funniest; Carla Eades and Randy Greves, most athletic Anita Scroggins and Randy Johann, most popular; Lori Riedel and Kerry Sauley, most appealing smile; Lisa Benham and Scott Davidson, most active; Kandi Ashcraft and Vernay Reindollar, most overall talent; Shelly Anderson and Andy Damm, most class spirit; Laura Parker and De-

Providing musical entertainment, senior Jay Simmons performed "The Impossible Dream" and senior choir members sang "We May Never Pass This Way Again."

Telling amusing anecdotes about class members, Nancy Craig, Beth Elston and Randy Lakeman gave the class history.

The senior class gift, announced by Susan Hill, comprised two large red and white floor mats for the lobby.

Class president Deni Hall turned over the class key to Twyla Scudder, junior class president....the traditional act making the juniors official seniors.

The long-anticipated event over, seniors filed out of the gym. Those seniors who chose not to attend missed a special day, a chance for the class to honor each other.

Finally, it's time for GRADUATION

As the final days ticked by, just one event remained for 342 seniors to face together. Final exams were finished, Honors Day and Senior Grad Night at King's Island has passed and prom had come and gone. This final event, graduation, offered the last chance for seniors to see each other as one unit before leaving their school days and entering the "real world."

For some, graduation night represented freedom from homework and teachers. For others, their newly acquired diploma offered them opportunities to earn a living, continue at college, or get married, and for the more sentimental students, graduation symbolized an ending to six years of laughter, tears and friendships.

Clad in red and white gowns topped by awkward caps, seniors marched in to the traditional processional "Pomp and Circumstance," played by the band. Salutatorian Jon Wardlow opened the baccalaureate service with the invocation, followed by class treasurer Anita Scroggins who offered the scripture reading. Rev. Dale Hanner, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, gave the baccalaureate address, recalling his own experience as a young graduate.

Enlisting the aid of senior members, who performed for the last time, the band played "Just You 'n Me."

Opening the commencement service, class vice-president Beth Elston gave the welcome, followed by class secretary Nancy Craig who told the class history. Valedictorian Lisa Benham continued with the class intention.

Principal Bill Rector, who told each graduate "there is a miracle in you," then presented the class of 1980 to Superintendent of Schools Dr. Harlan Stuckwisch for the distribution of diplomas.

Class president Deni Hall, giving the farewell, led the class in the turning of the cap tassels. The senior class then shouted the class yell for the final time, expressing joy in their own informal way. Closing the ceremony, Jon Wardlow gave the benediction. The graduates marched out to "Fanfare and Recessional."

After the ceremony, the graduates scattered . . . some to greet parents and relatives and have pictures taken; others celebrated with friends. Looking back on graduation, one might not recall the words of the individual speakers, or who one sat by, but each will have his own memories, happy as well as sad. These years will not be forgotten.

Front row seniors feel a close-up view of the speakers and activities on graduation night. Students were seated by height in order to gain an uniform look. Many did not like this way, preferring to sit with friends.

Opening the baccalaureate service, Jon Wordlow bows his head while giving the invocation. The salutatorian later returned and closed the service with the benediction.

Vernay Reindollar finishes his high school playing days while performing a song made popular by the group Chicago. Vernay, a four-year band participant, plans to attend DePauw University to further his musical expertise.

The change in activities meeting day, and the elimination of scheduled meeting time for language clubs could not stop the fever of participation. Fundraising events and trips with different clubs made students realize just how many 'irons in the fire' they really had.

In addition to sparking students' learning interests, teachers had an added task also felt by students. The North Central evaluation, done every seven years meant more than a teacher occasionally being late getting to class. It meant three half-days of school in mid-October. When the official evaluation committee visited in April, students were on their best behavior, yet not so 'un-normal' as to present a false impression. The committee commended the student body ... and few were surprised, because we were fired up.

Sophomore Brook Reindollar notes an important point while reading directions from his chemistry lab book. Students made use of equipment, like ring stands and bunsen burners, during labs.

The learning process began at home. Now in high school, you know Mom was right when she said,

The day a student receives that first 'F' in school marks the day he realizes just how much he has yet to learn.

Whether a student planned on attending college or entering the working world, MCHS offered a variety of classes that supplied the skills needed to obtain his goal. Each year, with this year being no exception, changes in academics occurred to improve learning conditions.

The most noticeable difference in academic policy involved the new attendance policy. Developed by Student Council, the policy awarded students with perfect attendance the choice of not having their final exams affect their semester grade.

Principal Bill Rector noted the policy change "definitely" affected the number of daily absences in a positive way. According to the principal, students postponed doctor and dental appointments until late afternoons or Saturdays in order not to miss class.

Faculty and students treated the policy with mixed emotions.

Sophomore Kim Burke commented she liked it. "People will come if they know they won't have to take tests," she said. Ross Teasley, a junior, however, expressed displeasure with the idea. "Some students will do their work whether they are sick or not," he said, "but now they have to suffer the consequences."

Senior Cindy Underwood noted she did not like the policy because it penalized the sick. Faculty member Mr. "Duke" Meyer, like many faculty members, endorsed the policy, noting, "Students are making more of an effort to get here."

Students sometimes experienced difficulty during early morning hours finding a specific teacher, usually because he was involved in an early North Central meeting. This year marked the time to face re-evaluation, which occurs every seven years. Students and faculty completed self-studies for the credentials board, giving information on areas such as class size, the library sources and physical facilities. Mr. Rector commented he felt confident the school would receive accreditation, adding the evaluation "keeps us on our toes."

A capital improvement plan, which would have started renovation of most department areas and construction of an athletic facility to house two gym floors, a swimming pool and wrestling area, was proposed at the beginning of the school year. However, due to public protest, the plan later was rescinded by the school board.

Juniors again faced competency testing, completing exams in language arts and social studies. According to Mr. Rector, however, these expensive and time-consuming tests meant "very little," since no minimum competency requirements have been established by the state. Therefore, no student who failed the tests lost his diploma.

Students, exposed to numerous guest speakers, became more informed about school and business opportunities. A sociologist and psychologist from Hanover College visited the psychology classes. Mr. Bob Wolf of the Madison police department frequently talked to driver's education classes and U.S. government classes. Representatives from Ivy Tech, Sullivan Business College and ITT talked about their respective schools to business students.

Each department experienced changes, whether in attendance, curriculum or teachers. The language arts department, affecting 1200 students in English classes and 300 students in foreign language classes, carried the largest load. Mr. Keith Alexander, coming from the junior high, arrived as the new department faculty member. Mrs. Sarah Smith, program leader, noted the department again sponsored the essay contest in conjunction with National Education Week. Taking advantage of Indiana University, advanced French and Spanish students visited the Bloomington campus to experience college-level classes. French and German students traveled to Europe during spring break to see and experience the countries they studied.

Brainy Benham amazes peers

Valedictorian Lisa Benham broke the traditional idea of the "bookworm." Not content to just bring home outstanding grades semester after semester, the senior excelled outside of class as well. Serving as Student Council president and editor-in-chief of the Madisonian, Lisa managed to budget time for homework and extra-curricular activities. The secret to her accomplishments, explained Lisa, was staying up late at night. According to Lisa, "Staying up 'till 2 o'clock is one way of getting things done."

Lisa did get things done. Besides heading time-consuming activities, the golf member received several awards. As a junior, she won first place at the History Day district contest. Recently the DAR Good Citizen was presented to her for outstanding community service. On the playing fields, the GAA member excelled as well, earning letters in volleyball, basketball and golf.

Despite the time devoted to school-related interests, Lisa found time to perfect a favorite activity—performing magic. The magic enthusiast performed her tricks at birthday parties, church groups and nursing homes, often saving her favorite "fire" tricks for last.

much closer to home, they experienced the Middle Ages within the classroom. Students sang and dramatized Old English ballads. Decked in Renaissance costumes, students danced, sang and acted for extra credit.

The health, physical education and recreation department received a new 12-place simulator system and filmstrip program to replace the older eight-place system.

Students interested in psychology took advantage of the advanced psychology class offered for the first time this year. Mrs. Frances Eisan, program leader of the social studies department, noted the general psychology classes conducted several experiments in class, with one involving the care of two plants named Alice and Matilda.

During their study of local history, 400 U.S. history students visited graveyards and historic homes. Juniors in these classes also participated in district competition during History Day in April.

to attract creative students into its elective program. Over 275 students participated in art projects. A popular project involved 98 students who designed puppets using light bulbs, paper, glue and paint. The makers of the puppets created them with animal expressions, explained instructor Mr. Gary Chapman. Senior Stew Cutshall noted Muppet characters, like 'French Chef' and 'Scooter' served as popular models. The senior added he fashioned his puppet after 'Miss Piggy.' This marked the fifth year the puppets were constructed.

Biology students 'roughed it' by participating again on biology field trips in early spring. To pay for transportation costs, Mr. Jerry Ison's biology classes sold ferns and potted plants.

Once again the mathematics department sponsored the national math contest in March. Interested students prepared for the test at several math 'parties,' with the aid of instructor Mr. Jerry Dougan. This department also sported a new faculty member, Mr. Gary Merrell. —>

Scott Davidson, Marca Vires, Mario Scott, Kathy Peters and Duane Mason display their singing talents and gain extra credit by performing the ballad "Annabel Lee" in Comp/Lit class.

Involved in pinning pattern pieces together, Randy Wingham and Robbie Whiteford construct pillows. The boys learned the basics of sewing in this class which was open only to boys.

No. 1 junior prefers math

Ranking first in a class of 320 did not come easy, according to junior Gary Hubbard. Holding this prestigious rank for the past two years, Gary admitted he studied 2.5 to 3 hours each night. The Science Club member, preferring math above other subjects, enjoyed reading about mathematics, plus working involved problems and experimenting with calculators. Hoping to pursue a career in mathematics, Gary said he would like to instruct at the college level.

Gary excelled in other subjects also. As a junior, the German Club member contributed the winning entry in the National Education Week essay contest sponsored by the Language Arts Department. One of three juniors, Gary also was selected to compete in the National Council of Teachers of English essay contest.

Although enjoying his success at school, Gary prefers not to dwell on his class rank. The junior, noting he works hard to keep his good grades, divulged, "It won't kill me if I'm not ranked No. 1". Gary concluded, "I just try and do my best and be satisfied with it."

Have you . . .

In addition to hosting the solo and ensemble contests, Mr. Phillip Cooper, program leader noted the music department sponsored the Valley Choral Festival, which attracted seven area schools.

The business department received a taste of the working world with field trips which included a viewing of an actual trial at the county courthouse and a visit to Lincoln Life Insurance. The department acquired a new memory typewriter which aided typing students. Mr. Bill Black's business law students put textbook concepts to work as they performed a mock court trial and "ripped-off" students with an educational fraud, designed to show the gullibility of people. Students collected money for a new vending machine, but actually no machine was purchased. The money they received was given to Student Council for charitable causes.

One hundred and sixty-seven boy and girl home economics students relished furniture, completed needlecraft and sewing projects, prepared home-cooked meals and designed "dream" houses during their classes.

A revival of interest in the industrial arts classes necessitated the addition of three early morning classes, commented Mr. Bill Freeman, program director. Dedicated students started class at 7:30, instead of at 8:35. The agriculture class tended research plots on the Madison State Hospital grounds.

Upperclassmen David Hill, Tim Barringer and Steve Gorlinghouse take time out to discuss the highlights of the day while finishing their assigned class duties in Wood II.

Communications I students Diana Low and Troy Phagan take a break from their class work on political cartooning. In this class, which is required for work on the newspaper and yearbook, students are involved in radio play productions, news and feature story writing, the fundamentals of television and creating and selling newspaper ads.

The wiz kid

Not often does a 13-year old student get to be a sophomore in high school, but Andy Wurtz broke academic tradition by skipping two grades. Displaying academic superiority by skipping kindergarten and ninth grade, Andy noted he studied Algebra I in fifth grade and geometry in the sixth grade. During seventh grade Andy came to the high school to attend Algebra II and chemistry classes. Commenting, "I was bored at the junior high," the golf team member was glad to transfer to the high school.

Admitting he seldom sees his friends at the junior high, Andy noted friendships were hard to form at first. However, Andy said he prefers life at the high school, adding, "the junior high is a prison!"

The swim team manager noted he enjoyed math classes above his other subjects, especially advanced math. At home, Andy pursues his math interests by "fiddlin' around with calculators."

Andy has won his share of honors, reigning as the Boy's Club state spelling contest champ. During last year's Ninth Grade Honor's Day, Andy, as an eighth-grader, was granted awards in math, science and general achievement. This marked the first time a student other than a ninth grader was honored.

Biologists rediscover the 'birds 'n the bees'

Biology instructor Mr. Jerry Ison enjoys the challenge of slipping through a narrow rock passage. Mr. Ison noted the Pine Mountain Settlement School provides excellent resources for environmental studies.

Supplied with notebooks and pencils, Stephanie Gibson, Tina Facemire, Amy Thomas, Debbie Tipton and Cathy Collis take notes as they listen to new information regarding Kentucky wildlife.

Dissecting pigs, giggling for frogs and learning folk dances occupied over 50 student biologists while on their annual biology field trips. Biology teachers Mr. Dave Waltz and Mr. Jerry Ison headed the trips, accompanied by interested class members. The three day excursions, explained Mr. Ison, purported to "enhance the material taught during the year" and allow students to get "outside the four-walled classroom."

Camp Livingston, a Jewish youth camp located in Switzerland County, became the open-air classroom of Mr. Waltz's students April 19-21. As in previous years, strong-stomached students engaged in the main activity of the trip—dissection. Fetal pigs, white rats and hand-caught frogs became the victims of eager students.

Pine Mountain Settlement School, a former boarding school and now an environmental lab in Eastern Kentucky, housed Mr. Ison's students during the weekend of April 25-27. The weatherman did not comply with the group's plans, however, forcing them to return home early on a six hour bus ride, drenched by ceaseless rains. Nevertheless, students studied wild flowers, trees, geology and Indians. A night hike attracted many of the campers, including sophomore lab assistant Cindy Potter and junior Keith Hill. Both agreed the hike was a fun activity. Keith noted the trip offered several firsts for him—eating tree bark and drinking out of a creek.

Both groups took time from scheduled activities to "goof off." The lake at Camp Livingston provided canoeing enthusiasts a place to practice their skills. Occasional "accidents" among canoeers occurred, with students ending up in the lake, instead of in the canoes.

Mr. Ison's group received lessons in folk dancing and learned the intricacies of do-si-doing and sashaying with a partner. "That was the funnest part!" exclaimed sophomore Karla Miller.

After their fun-filled weekends, students returned home, sunburned, tired and soaked and not quite ready to face another week of school. It had been a long weekend.

Traveling expands definition

Club—a group of people organized for a common purpose, especially a group that meets regularly.

The MCHS clubs achieved this definition as they shared common interests and served the community as they met regularly, once every three weeks throughout the school year.

Sunshine, the largest club, devoted most of its time to the state project which involved buying medical equipment for Riley Hospital in Indianapolis. The all-girl organization raised money selling Christmas paper and ribbon, plus manned the concession stands at ball games. They further extended their charity through social projects such as giving Thanksgiving baskets, playing Santa Claus to five Jefferson County families and providing flowers and treats for nursing home patients.

Another service club, Hi-Y, also sold concessions at home games but directed their donations basically to help the Cambodians and crippled children. They sponsored another "Fast So Others May Feast" day, participated in the Cambodian Relief Walk-a-Thon, and raised funds for the annual Crusade for Children, sponsored by Louisville's WHAS Radio-Television station.

Mr. Bryan Peters, a 1977 graduate of MCHS and currently a junior at Purdue University, addressed the club on "A Christian on Campus."

Many students were touched at the annual Hi-Y convocation, featuring Mr. Myron Davis of Iowa State University who discussed living an effective Christian life.

FHA traveled a lot throughout the year with a trip to the famous Benihana of Toyko to experience different cultures in preparing, serving and eating Japanese food. The Federal Reserve Board comprised another stop on their Louisville trip where the highlight included seeing old money destroyed and →

To qualify for H-Y membership, students must demonstrate honesty and good citizenship. Current officers include Jim Wardlow, Kerry Sooley, Cedric Klein, Mark Klopp, Scott Davidson and Mark Goldsmith. The club traveled to a Cincinnati Reds game for one of their social events.

Latin Club members display their love for Roman culture and heritage during Latin Club Week, an annual event co-ordinated by instructor Mr. Burton Moore. "When in Rome do as the Romans do" served as the main theme for a Latin breakfast featuring fresh fruit and flowing togas.

Future Homemakers of America members discuss plans for the state convention in Indianapolis which attracted several Madison delegates. To help raise proceeds for their travels and charitable projects, the club sold candy and delivered Valentine flowers to secret sweethearts.

Good, clear accurate reporting provides the key to good journalism, just as Quill and Scroll is the organization that honors those who meet its high standards. Mr. Don Royal of WAVE-TV spoke at this year's banquet which was coordinated by club president Shelly Anderson.

viewing $10,000, $5,000 and $1,000 bills. A trip to the FHA state convention earlier also helped the members attain a better understanding of the club's purpose. During the year, the girls sponsored a Teachers Tea to show the faculty their appreciation, visited nursing homes and hosted guest speaker Mrs. Debbie Hart who presented a clothing demonstration.

Language clubs hit the road and air for many cultural experiences, going from Louisville to Paris to Munich.

French Club traveled to the Magic Pan Restaurant in Louisville to sample French cuisine and 13 French students over spring vacation spent three days in Paris. There they visited castles of Loire Valley and slept in a castle for two nights to get the real feeling of the country and its culture.

The German Club joined its French colleague and also did a lot of traveling. Members ventured to Cincinnati to participate in the Octoberfest, a German festival, and to Louisville to hear German musicians—the Stratton Mountain Boys. For several members, the highlight of the year included a trip to Germany and Austria over spring break to tour cities such as Munich, Heidelberg, Innsbruck, Rothenburg and Frankfurt. Traveling to Germany provided a real asset to their German studies, plus created pleasant memories to last their life time.

Traveling locally, Spanish Club watched Spanish folk dancers in Louisville and attended a Reds ball game in Cincinnati. Guest speakers for the club included an Indiana University professor who spoke on the Spanish cultural influence in the United States, and a missionary from Colombia, South America who discussed the rural life in Colombia. Both addresses gave students a much better idea of the Spanish culture and lifestyle in comparison to America.

Latin Club projects centered on school activities. The enthusiastic members decorated the display case and their classroom, hosted a unique breakfast during Latin Week and sponsored occasional bake sales.

Letterman Club spent most of the year on fund-raising projects such as selling posters and Cubs shirts to help pay for scholarships and badly needed weight equipment. To celebrate, they had a pizza feast at Mr. Gatti's at the end of the year.

Members of BLAST also traveled, adding extra pleasure to the routine school year. The club toured the Federal Reserve Bank in Louisville. The trip acquainted students with the functions and procedures of the bank. They also observed Mrs. Doty Hart of Sullivan Business College give a clothing demonstration. Mrs. Hart cleverly demonstrated how many outfits one could have with just a few basics and colorful accessories.

A trip to Indiana University Southeast provided a great insight for members of the Science Club who attended the Science Project Workshop.

Seeing real theater for the first time turned out to be a fun and rewarding experience for many Drama Club members. The club made several trips to the Derby Dinner Playhouse in Clarksville to see shows such as "So Long Stanley" starring Jerry Mathers and Tony Dow and "My Fair Lady." Major productions of the club this year involved the all school play, "Missing Link," the annual Variety Show, Children's Theater and several Christmas skits for community organi-

Promoting journalism fellowship was the main purpose behind Quill and Scroll's field trip to the Showcase Cinemas in Louisville. Mr. Dan Royal of WAVE-Television served as guest speaker at the journalism banquet. He primarily related his speech to the way he, a former small-town Texan, got to where he is.

63 ATTAIN HIGHEST DISTINCTION

Sixty three students received the highest honor the school can bestow, as result of their induction into the Madison chapter of the National Honor Society of Secondary Schools. Thirty four obtained this distinction this year, while the others gained their membership last year.

In order to achieve this status, an applicant must express enthusiasm for scholarship, stimulate a desire to render service, promote worthy leadership and encourage the development of character. Not only did the members have to meet the above standards, but also attain an elevated grade average. The required average for any junior (seven semesters) shall have maintained or exceeded that of 3.500 and that of any senior (five semesters) 3.333.

The main duties for the students involved in the Madison chapter included being part of one of the following committees—membership, scholarship and induction.

This year marked the first year for the society to hold a candlelight induction ceremony in the North Madison Christian Church. President Kerry Souley presided over the ceremony as Lisa Benham, Mike Henderson, Kim Miller, Cathy Thorpe (secretary/treasurer), participated by representing candles representing character, leadership, scholarship and service. Another officer of the organization included vice-president Linda Bird.

Cathy Tyler Thorpe hands a red rose to junior inductee Tracy Poling as seniors Kim Miller, Shelly Anderson and Lisa Benham await the next person receiving membership into the NHS.

The Madison chapter originally began in 1950. To this honored group this year's initiates included seniors Robert L. Bockus, Stewart A. Cutshall, Scott Davidson, Karla Galbraith, Cathy Hale, Valerie L. Harness, Randy Johann, Helen L. Lyons, Betsy Perry, Aza Shumate, Louanne B. Stockdale, Sarah J. Tucker, Cindie S. Underwood and Sam Zelony.

The junior initiates included

Melissa Browner, Rhonda K. Elston, Alan Fitzpatrick, Rhonda Gossert, Greg Giesler, Paige Gruemmer, David Irwin, Eric Jones, Mark Leas, Gregg Mayberry, James Neff, John Pietrykowski, Tracy Poling, Danielle Raycher, Twyla Scudder, Loren Stewart, Ross Teasley, Kimberly Williams, Clara Willick and Sherry Wilson.

Mr. Paul Meyer, a VICA adviser for 13 years, helped his chapter attain the reputation as one of the most successful clubs in the state, capturing the outstanding club award for seven straight years.

Senior Doug Adams, president of the DECA Club, cherishes his state award for placing second in the food marketing division. Employed at a local grocery store, the president helped emcee the annual banquet.

VICA, DECA yield team effort

The mere mention of the word "team" usually brought visions of athletics ranging from golf to football. However, other teams existed that were rarely recognized for their winning records such as the VICA and DECA Clubs. Throughout the course of the year, these teams compiled impressive records with good showings in their various business related competitions.

The Madison chapter of the National Vocational Industrial Clubs of America (VICA) established itself as one of the most extraordinary clubs in the state.

The club, consisting of almost 50 members, captured the award for the "Outstanding Club in the State" for the seventh year in a row. They also collected major awards in spelling and essay competitions while taking top honors in the business procedure competitions for the fifth year in a row, according to club adviser Mr. Paul "Duke" Meyer.

The club's sponsor stated that Karla Galbraith, along with the remainder of the business procedure team, earned the right to compete on the national level this summer in Atlanta, GA.

What has made this club successful, according to the adviser, "is the people and the program. They're the ones who sell this program to the employers." And sell it they did.

The club members sold everything from candles to candy, plus parked cars at the sectional basketball games to raise expense money for their club.

"Our kids made this club successful...they're the ones who count," concluded Mr. Meyer.

The DECA Club (Distributive Education Clubs of America) adviser, Mr. Darryl Smith, who received a state Outstanding Service Award, also headed a successful program. In this program, students are given the chance at a job opportunity that they can use to train for a career, plus acquire leadership qualities.

During the State Careers Development Conference the DECA Club received the chance to show some leadership, and club president Doug Adams showed everyone as he took second place honors in the food marketing division. Scott Ellis made his presence known with a fourth place finish in the public speaking competition. The club as a whole also received a 100 percent membership award and a 20 percent growth award.

Both programs, because of their continual growth, attracted a wider range of students and thus furnished many area employers with top quality help.

Both advisers concluded that their programs share one common goal, to help students gain experience and knowledge for their future career. Both indicated they feel their programs do just that.

Hammond and Regina Mason for DECA. Held at the Moose Lodge, the banquet provided a formal opportunity for the employees to say "thanks." Music instructor Phil Cooper provided special music.

Senior Michele Horine competes in the job interview contest at the YICA regional competition hosted by Madison. Michele did not place in job interview, but went on to win second in state spelling competition.

FFA club receives statewide acclaim

Award winners of the FFA banquet included Bob Backus, DeKob Award; Mrs. Wilma Read, Distinguished Service; Leon Phillips, Star Farmer; Donnie Smith, Jeff Owens and Doug Harrell, scholarship recipients.

The Madison chapter of FFA continued to gain state recognition with Leon Phillips winning the chapter and district Star Farmer Award, and by sending 11 students to the national convention.

According to FFA adviser Mr. Gene Spicer, the Star Farmer citation is given to the student who exhibits the best farming ability.

Delegates attending the national convention in Kansas City included Leon, Raymond Spicer, Kevin Clark, Steve Thurnall, Joe VanWye, Billy Miller, James Owens, Kevin Spicer, Steve Riley, Tom Cain and Bob Backus. While there, the Madison delegates toured the TWA maintenance plant, plus attended the American Royal Rodeo and Livestock Show.

At the annual FFA banquet in March, 34 chapter members attained special recognition. Award recipients included Lynn Pennington, agriculture electrification; Rick Little, agriculture mechanics; Leon Phillips, agriculture processing; Gary Higgins, beef production; Leon Phillips, dairy production; Jim Huff, fruit and vegetable production; Randy Derringer, home and farmstead improvement; Floyd Cain, poultry production; Roger Stites, soil and water management; Tom Cain, swine production; Rick Imel, diversified livestock; Gary Birge, FFA creed; Kyle Lyon, freshman public speaking; Bob Backus, essay; James Owens, mechanics demonstration; Randy Derringer, production agriculture demonstration; Rick Imel, impromptu speaking; Gary Imel, public speaking; Joe Van Wye, agriculture sales demonstration; Gloria Read, FFA sweetheart; Kyle Lyon, Star Greenhand; and Bob Backus, DeKob Award.

Throughout the year, the award winners combined their agribusiness talents to raise 86 acres of grain on state hospital grounds. Mr. Spicer praised the chapter's efforts, noting the corn averaged 98 bushels per acre on the test plot.

Kyle Lyon, who received the Star Green-hand award, finds the large bales convenient to his livestock operation. The sophomore also assists his father with grain and tobacco production.

Young farmers, as a result of the changing times, discovered girls too. Understood the fluctuating grain market. The chapter voted Gloria Read the FFA Sweetheart at the annual awards ceremony.

Sophomore Kyle Lyon performs many chores at his family's farm near Canaan. He also found time to help his FFA chapter raise 86 acres of grain on the state hospital grounds.

Teachers helping teachers help teach

When the time came to make that tough career decision, the decision became easier as a result of several school sponsored programs. One of these programs, Exploratory Teaching, attempted to teach responsibility while creating an outlet for creativity.

According to supervisor Mrs. Frances Eisan, the program changed quite a bit since its inception approximately six years ago. Before, she explained, students could only help a teacher during their free time but did not receive credit. But now, a student receives social studies credit, plus assumes more of a responsible position.

To be an exploratory teacher, a student must have completed a semester of psychology with a "B" average, attained a good attendance record, and gained the supervisor's approval, she noted.

The students, according to the psychology teacher, spent four days a week in the classroom observing teachers, working with students individually and sometimes grading papers. Mrs. Eisan noted the students made out daily activity reports which they discuss with her one day a week. They also were required to do outside reading in addition to tests.

The supervisor noted the professional-cooperative teachers showed a lot of responsiveness and enjoyed having the students help them. It really helped, the supervisor noted, when one of their students needed individual attention they could not give.

A couple of the drawbacks, Mrs. Eisan noted, included the inability of some of the teachers to give the students enough responsibility and students not finding it enough of a challenge.

The co-op teachers generally have very good reports on the students who assisted them, explained the supervisor, reporting they were "hard working" and "very conscientious." The only problems she came across, she added, included students with a "lack of maturity" and those who were very shy. She noted she did not have much of a problem with this.

Most of the exploratory teachers noted the program turned out to be a very good experience and were glad they had participated. The program also included a lot of fun for some of the students. For example, one of the student teachers noted he received a pair of panty hose from three of his students as a gag birthday gift. Another one of the students added she received love letters from one of her students.

Mrs. Eisan concluded that approximately 15-20 students participate annually in the exploratory teaching program with a total of 100-120 involved since the program began.

Heidi Isen, a senior who taught special education at E.O. Muncie, noted, "In helping to teach children with learned disabilities, I have gained insight to the problems I will face in my future career."

While teaching a fifth grade reading class at Michigan Road, senior Shelly Anderson explained, "It's really fun going back to your old grade school and teaching the kids instead of being taught."

"It's great," exclaimed senior Stewart Cutshall who taught Spanish I at the high school. "It's really nice to know you can help students shape their lives in the future or change some of their attitudes in some way."

Jill Larimore, who assisted in special education classes under the direction of Mrs. Phyllis Steinhart at the junior high, expounded, "It's the most fulfilling thing I have ever done. I love it."

"I have learned as much as the students I teach, perhaps more," stated senior Duane Mason. Teaching music at the junior high, he noted, "It is undoubtedly the most fulfilling thing I have ever done."

"It's an excellent program," noted senior Stephanie Humes who helped Mrs. Nancy Cheatham teach special education at the high school. "Anyone going into teaching," Stephanie said, "should take it. It has great capabilities."

"You are put in a real life situation and you find out how you really will react," stated senior Corla Ender, who taught special education at the high school and also physical education at E.O. Muncie.

Mike Taylor, who aided Mrs. Clarabelle Yunker with music at the junior high, noted, "It helped me make a decision about becoming a teacher and I find it enjoyable to help teach students."

Council forms exam policy, 'Morp' dance

New dance becomes success at MCHS as Joyce, Freeman, Thorne and Miller receive honors as first Morp royalty

Formerly many students felt no real incentive to attend school everyday. They found it more convenient to schedule doctor or dental appointments during the school day in an attempt to get out of class. However, the Student Council gave students a reason to reverse this action and stay in their classes, by adopting an attendance-exam policy. Lisa Benham, the Student Council president, claimed this policy was "the biggest thing Council has done this year." The policy, which school officials approved just several weeks prior to the end of the first semester, allows the final exam grades of a student with perfect semester attendance to count only if they help his semester average.

Lisa stated the idea for the policy originated last spring when she visited South Dearborn High School, where a similar policy helped increase attendance considerably. In her campaign speech for Student Council president, the official recalled she first proposed the policy idea to the school. As a result, she said Principal Bill Rector and Mr. Roger Gallatin, the Student Council sponsor, discussed the idea with other school officials who generally opposed it. The student president stated she was very surprised when the officials later passed the plan.

Lisa added she talked to 60 teachers about the policy before its adoption. While several teachers have expressed dislike for the policy, the council president continued only one teacher actually complained to her about it.

Lisa stated that the policy does have a few problems and may not be continued in following years. Students with perfect semester attendance, said the official, should be recognized Senior Honor Day along with those who have perfect attendance throughout high school.

The Student Council created another innovation after the exam policy later in the year—the "Morp" dance. According to Lisa, the "Morp" dance was formed for the sophomore class which could not attend the prom, although it remained open to all classmen. She added the name "morp" resulted from the word prom spelled backwards.

Finally on April 18, the first annual Morp dance arrived. Decorated with toilet paper, old newspapers, trash buckets and paper insects, the cafeteria was transformed into a dilapidated setting for the bizarre event.

Entertained by the music of the band "Night Sky," the bon students culminated the dance by choosing seniors Scott Freeman and Kelly Joyce as Morp king and queen, and sophomores Todd Thorne and Karla Miller as prince and princess.

The Morp royalty received their due honors as they were enthroned upon toilet seats and crowned with newspaper and onion plants.

Lisa noted the dance seemed a success, judging from attendance and with the council profiting $228.

Several students, she added, told her they enjoyed the crowning, the band and the country music.

She noted the dance may well be repeated next year, but that next year's Student Council will have to confirm that action.

Morp queen Kelly noted that she had never had so much fun as that night.

"I went with the impression that it would be stuffy," she explained, "but I was really glad that everybody let loose."

The new queen later joked that her coronation was "the most proudest moment of my life."

"I'm glad," she laughed, "someone finally realized my beauty and chose to reward me for it .... Next, I'm going to become Esrevnu Ssim (that's Miss Universe backwards)."

King Scott merely commented his winning of the title seemed a "supreme head-rush," whereas Prince Todd stated the honor that was bestowed upon him left him in total awe. "It was cosmic ... pure karma," he laughed.

Princess Karla too joked of the honor, but was less boastful in her acclaim.

The council introduced yet another project this year to honor and motivate students to excell in their school work. The council adopted the policy of issuing honor roll ribbons to top achievers.

While the ribbons, given after each semester, just served as a little momento for making the honor roll, Lisa stated the council hoped they would influence others to improve their grades.

By the close of the school year, Volume 60, No. 14 of the Madisonian and Volume 53 of the Mahisco neared completion with the effort of 35 journalism students.

For some of the newspaper and yearbook students their role as "typewriter jockey" or "shutter bug" did not begin in August, but the preceding month at various journalism workshops.

Madisonian staff members attending the Ball State University workshop included Lisa Benham, Donn Dunker, Paul Dunker, Valerie Harness and Allison Osborne.

Staffers attending the yearbook division included Brad Allen, Lisa Calvin, Kim Miller and Jill O'Brien.

Several yearbook staffers attended a yearbook camp at nearby Hanover College. Representing the Mahisco there were Mary Jo Courtney, Heidi Isom, Kathy Peters, Lori Riedel and Twyla Scudder.

It seemed as though some students could not resist attending a place of high education for the benefit of absorbing more journalism knowledge, however. In October, Becky Holl, Heidi, Valerie and Lisa (Benham) led sports writing sessions at the Indiana Southeastern Journalism Conference, held at Indiana University Southeast. Donn and Twyla also journeyed to the New Albany campus to participate in editorial leadership seminars.

The two Communications I classes busily sold ads and recorded their own renditions of radio productions. Audio features ranged from "Honolulu Homocide" involving the murder of Chin Wan-ti, a hula dancer, to Michelle Finet, Kim Rice and Jackie Taylor's parody of the old folk ballad "Lizzi Borden Took an Ax." The detective adventure on the Hawaiian islands starred Shawny Anderson, Lee Ann McKay and Todd Thorne.

In March, a couple of Communications I students earned Madison High School distinction by entering a state newswriting contest hosted by the Indiana University School of Journalism. Tracy Poling placed second in the newswriting competition, which was won by Ben Davis High School of Indianapolis.

Another honor for the communications program occurred in late winter when the North Central evaluating team cited the newspaper and yearbook for excellence.

Many high school students listened to "Hutch" in the mornings on the New-KJ100 radio station in Louisville, but three story hunting newspaper students—Valerie, Lisa Benham and Susan Hill actually met him for an interview.

The Communications I students also got a glimpse of the popular disc jockey, as a result of their field trip experience to the Derby city. In addition to touring KJ100, the group also toured WHAS Television, where they viewed everything from the prop room to the control panel.

The Ninth Annual Journalism Banquet was held in early May at the Clifty Inn, with Mr. Dan Royal of WAVE-Television of Louisville as guest speaker.

Students receiving recognition at the affair included Tracy Poling and Shawny Anderson for their academic performance and contribution in Communications I class.

Honored yearbook staffers included Heidi for Best Design and the Headliner citation which is determined by staff vote; Kim for Best Copy; Lisa Calvin for Best Spread; and Mary Jo for the Medalist citation which is adviser-selected.

Five Madisonian members were recognized with the two Distinguished Reporting citations going to Lisa Benham and Valerie; the Journalism Production Award to Brent Dionne; the Headliner citation to Kelly Joyce; and the Medalist distinction to Susan Hill.

Senior Honor Day awards were extended to Lisa Benham for newspaper, and to Kim Miller for yearbook.

Shawny Anderson and Tracy Poling receive citations for their academic performance in Communications I class. The awards were presented at the Ninth Annual Journalism Banquet, held at Clifty Inn.

Kim Miller, exhausted from the endless search for clever new yearbook copy and layout ideas, dozes off to sleep in her room at the Ball State University Journalism Workshop.

Mahisco staffers Jill O'Brien, Brad Allen and Kathy Peters find a few fun moments between deadline pressures and interviews. Occasionally the editorial board would call off class and substitute a pizza ring.

'Tonight we have a really big show'

The theatre darkens. Music begins to play. The curtains roll back, revealing not a Broadway play nor a world-renown celebrity, but another popular Drama Club production.

Sponsored by English teacher Mrs. Billie Means, the club continued to entertain hundreds of theatre patrons in the school community. Productions ranged from humorous Variety Show acts to touching Christmas stories.

The club gave numerous students the opportunity to enter the International Thespian Society by earning 10 points for participation in club projects and theatrical activities.

To view professional theatre, the club traveled to the Derby Dinner Playhouse in Clarksville to view Neal Simon's "Barefoot in the Park" starring movie actress Dorothy Lamour; "My Fair Lady," and "So Long, Stanley."

The latter show starred Tony Dow and Jerry Matthers of "Leave It To Beaver" fame.

The club frequently extended its talent to aid local charities. At Christmas, English instructor Mr. Bill Lindquist and senior Melody Robinson directed the "The Littlest Christmas Tree" story for the Salvation Army. In the play, Krista, a little girl played by sophomore Julie Stephan, has her father, sophomore Richard Ice, get a Christmas tree for her. As the father gets lost in a blizzard, the forest animals decorate the littlest Christmas tree, sophomore Mark Schmidt, for her.

Other cast members included junior Clara Willick as Krista's mother; sophomore Kelli Ellis as Brenda Bird; junior Janie Hinkle as Rusty Raccoon and junior Marcie Steinert as Renee Rabbit.

At the request of Tri-Kappa sorority, another play based on the poem "Twas the Night Before Christmas" played for three weekends under the direction of Marcia Vires. The cast included Kerry Thompson, Julie Luttrell, Linda Irwin, Teresa Harness, Bill Goble, and Cheryl Naylor. Sophomore Debbie Woodill worked with make-up.

In February, many of the club members participated in the Variety Show. The acts started with "Lies, Inc." featuring Bill, Cheryl, Julie Stephan and seniors Duane Mason and Kathy Peters. This sketch dealt with a company that specialized in selling fake excuses to people. Following this, senior Jon Wardlow presented his "Star Wars Sketch Introduction" and Cedric Klein sang his creation of "Ted Kennedy's Chappaquiddick Blues." Other acts comprised Gregg Varble and Kelli Ellis' production of a novelist and his wife plotting a murder for his next book in "Scarface."

In "Love Scores a Touchdown," Tracy Anderson plays the sister of a college football coach who attempts to lure football player Jon into joining her brother's team. Kathy, Cheryl, Julie Stephan, Chris Hale, Randy Lakeman and Cathy Hale joined in "Casanova, Jr." which deals with a boy who accidentally plans two dates for the same dance.

Between acts, Bill, Cheryl, Cedric and sophomores Nancy Hart and Gary Haagland provided entertainment.

In late April and early May, the club entertained surrounding grade schools with the annual Children's Theatre production. The play, entitled "Behind the Egg-Ball," was written by sophomores Mark Storm, Cathy Callis, Jim Taylor, Kevin Blair, Kris Kemper and Melody. In the performance, two bunnies, Samantha and Julie (Melody and Nancy), disobey their mother (Julie Luttrell) by leaving their yard to find a ball. As they look for it, Faxy Fox (Gregg) captures them for his meal. Meanwhile, Looney Ostrich (Clara) finds the ball and thinks it is an egg she laid, although she has not laid an egg in years.

Benny Bear (Mark) finally saves the day by rescuing Sam and Julie from the wicked fox. When the bunnies are reunited with their mother, the ending turns out even happier as Looney lays an egg of her own. The cast also included Kelli, Janie, Julie Stephan, Marilyn Hackney and Paul Rawson. English teacher Mr. Burton Moore and Gregg co-directed the play.

Finally, the Drama Club year ended with the annual club banquet designed to elect new officers, honor new Thespians and say farewell to graduating members.

The new initiates included Steve, Bill, Cathy, Julie Stephan, senior Doug Thayer, junior Lisa Boley, Julie Luttrell and Cheryl.

Bill, Lisa, Julie Stephan, Julie Luttrell, Clara and Cheryl were appointed to replace president Tracy Anderson, vice-president Jon, secretary Kathy, treasurer Kandy Ashcraft and historian Terri Gray.

The club extended special recognition to Tracy and Randy, citing them as recipients of the "Best Thespian" citations.

The Drama Club closed its year as the Thespian motto was quoted ... "Act well your part, there all the honor lies."

Under the direction of Mr. Phil Cooper, Janeen Eades and Tammy Simons attempt to perfect their singing ability while practicing for one of their upcoming choir concerts.

Junior Brenda Hall reads the words from her "Serenade to Music" book while singing along with the rest of the choir. During the Christmas holidays, the choir gave two concerts.

Everything from trumpets to trombones were seen and heard by the audience in the football stands as the band performed at halftime. Members of the group included Greg Giesler and Kim Williams.

Band, choir in tune to many activities

They walked in the middle of Main Street, climbed the pyramid of the Sun in Mexico, made noise in church, danced on the basketball court and boarded a plane for Europe. They were the Madison music students.

Brass choir, jazz ensemble, clarinet ensemble, German band, pep band, concert band, marching band, wood wind, trumpet quartet, choir, Camerata and the boy's choir made up the electives for the music department. One-hundred sixty-three students, as a result, participated in the program, which, of course, created a lot of groups and names for the four instructors to handle.

While many teens enjoyed the carefree, sunny days of summer, members of the marching band sacrificed some of their free time and trekked up to the Friendly Farms band camp near Bloomfield. In addition Kandy Ashcraft, Chuck Davidson, Mary Hassfurder, Jon Wardlow and Shari Wilson studied under some of the state's best instructors at Indiana University.

The list of activities for the various music groups seemed endless. The band played in the Regatta Parade, Canaan Fall Festival Parade and the Madison Christmas Parade, plus performed in the state contest where they received a near top rating of two. The concert band enacted Christmas and spring concerts and the energetic students qualified for 12 ensembles in the state contest and obtained six ones and the superior rating of one at the Mexican Festival, too. Another honor for the group, commented Mr. Phil Cooper, choir director, included the hosting of the Valley Choral Festival.

The Camerata also executed many performances such as their show at the Chautauqua and the opera, "Emel of the Night Visitors," in addition to singing in 42 public presentations, including such appearances as church services and Christmas caroling. Plus, the vocal assemblage placed seventh at the Midway Swing Choir Contest.

The choir spent some of their precious time selling goodies from Tom Watt kits with the proceeds going to finance the choir—>

Members of the marching band relax and watch the Cubs football game with much enthusiasm. Miss Louise Ferris directed the spirited musicians and Shan Wilson acted as majorette.

Six saxophones all in a row were sighted by the stage band audience. The woodwind players included Mark Leas, Azo Shumate, Angela Shumate, Chris Nemeth and Tommy Simmons.

banquet held in mid-May at the Madison Country Club.

The band sold cheese and sausage in the early fall, Christmas ornaments later in the season and also conducted a candy sale with the money going into the fund for their exciting trip to Mexico City where they stayed in the Hotel San Francisco and performed a request concert for 25,000 people.

The five day trip to the country south of the American border took place in late April. Mr. John Schrieber, the band director, stated that he applied for and received the invitation, along with two other bands from the United States. The 80 band students took part in four concerts, one of which was a contest, and along with Mr. Schrieber, Miss Louise Ferris, Mr. Alex Nemeth and 20 chaperones, they visited various sights, including the Aztec ruins in Teotihuacan, the pyramid of the Sun and Moon, the Shrine of Guadalupe, the Mexican National Cathedral, the Mexican Folk Ballet and the market place where they shopped.

Camerata, comprised of 21 members, also planned an impressive trip. On May 22 they left O'Hare Airport for a 21 day stay in 12 various cities in seven different countries in Europe.

In the middle of all the activity, Kandy Ashcroft, Mark Klopp, Vernay Reindollar and Jay Simmons each attained special distinction by being added to the Who's Who in American Music list. Those students distinguishing themselves with the title of all state chorus encompassed Kandy Ashcroft, Chuck Davidson, Scott Davidson, Susan Eckerty, Jo Fairchild, Bill Goble, Nancy Hart, Angela Shumate, Mike Taylor, Jon Wardlow and Shari Wilson. Vernay also was named to the All state Orchestra.

by Jill O'Brien

All decked out, these two Camerata performers, Jay Simmons and Linda Irwin, entertain the audience with lively dance steps. The Camerata group left for Europe in late May.

The pompon girls execute their grand finale for one of several pep sessions. Loren Stewart, Kandy Ashcraft, Mary Hoschuler, Kim Miller, Judy Cordon and Shari Wilson were a few members of the group.

The 21 members of Comerata sing while lined up on the stage. The talented group performed at the Chisholm and presented an opera in addition to 42 other public presentations.

Senior Vernay Reindollar concentrates his talents on the bass while junior Ross Teasley keeps beat on the drums. The two musicians accompanied the Comerata while it performed for the student body.

Senior Stephanie Humes does her part to entertain the football fans in the stands at halftime. Stephanie displays much coordination by twirling her rifle through the air.

The people a student passed in the halls each day eventually blended together, since most faces had been with the class since elementary and junior high days. However, a new line-up of classes allowed one to get to know the personalities behind the faces better, as worm dissection and verb conjugation were shared. Old friendships were kindled at the unnamed, but claimed sections of the building. A certain bench in the lobby, a table in the library, the top of the staircase, or in front of a locker—it didn't really matter as long as it contained one's friends.

The official looking faces in the crowded corridors belonged to the teachers. Some received warm greetings such as, "Hi, Dad" or "Holal". Others gained only a sneer or snicker. The instructors instigated the fire in students—whether it be in anger or learning.

Whether it was a friend, teacher or just another face met in the hallway, some emotion was sparked, even if all the people did blend together.

RING UP

Since band members were required to dress for Homecoming Spirit Week, trombone player Jon Wardlow got fired up for "Toga, Toga Toga Day" by wrapping himself in a sheet and donning a head-dress of leaves.

Senior Mark Klepp projects a tune on his trumpet from an arrangement of "Fiddler On the Roof" during the half-time entertainment of the varsity game against New Albany.

Although most seniors spent much of their three years of high school searching for the definitions of over 540 vocabulary words, the true meaning of the word senior never surfaced until the final year. As sophomores, the term senior meant someone to look up to, someone to respect. Juniors felt the word implied the final step before their journey into the real world. To seniors, this seemingly simple noun divided into many different connotations. For 30 students . . .

Class loses friend, Keith Cox

Most students sat quietly and meditatively in classes Oct. 12 as they pondered the unexpected loss of classmate Keith Cox.

Keith, a senior, was killed in an accident that also took the life of freshman Tim McClure and seriously injured 1979 graduate Jeff Croxton.

A friend to many, Keith loved and respected life a great deal. He enjoyed sports to a great extent and excelled in any sports activities he participated in.

Keith will always be remembered for his good humor and his ability to get along with others at home, work and school.

In the blue yonder

Imagine the feeling of being miles above the earth with a 20-mile view in all directions. Pilot Doug Thayer notes this panoramic view gives him a feeling of "being somewhat superior."

The senior who has flown for about two years, got interested in the sport when he went flying with a neighbor who was a pilot.

To get his license, Doug explained he had to acquire 40 hours of flying, 20 solo and 20 dual (with an instructor). In addition he had to attain a required number of cross country hours, pass a four hour written test plus secure a medical certificate.

Doug has traveled as far as Lexington, Bloomington and Shelbyville.

The student pilot did find himself in an awkward situation once when he was flying to Shelbyville. He was told the runway was easy to locate, but discovered otherwise.

Even though the senior encountered this troublesome situation, Doug claimed the only time he was ever really scared was the first time he flew solo.

One city, two stars

Senior Randy Lakeman, who journeyed to California for six weeks last summer, had the thrill of meeting the "charming, nice, lovely and gracious" Irene Dunn. Randy wrote the actress a letter, telling her he was a fan and would like to meet her.

Miss Dunn grew up in Madison, graduating from Madison High School in 1919. She was nominated for five Oscars and starred in films in the 30's and 40's.

Randy wrote the talented film star about events occurring in Madison after his return and he stated that his mother, who lives in California, kept in touch with the celebrated actress.

The senior attended drama classes while in California plus starred in a public service announcement on alcohol rehabilitation.

Randy also met Ronnie Howard of "Happy Days" and the 1950's sex symbol, Mamie Van Doren.

Randy anticipates becoming an actor and plans to return to California and hopefully star in some more commercials. Of all the commercials, Randy commented, he would most like to be in a Doctor Pepper commercial.

"It made me more aware of what I want to do after high school," said Randy about his trip.

In'klein'ed author

Christians who believe in the conspiracy theory and science fiction fans alike will enjoy reading "In the Night Visions . . .", according to student author Cedric Klein.

The senior noted he derived the title from the lead sentence of the Book of Daniel, chapter seven which deals with prophecies. He stated his main sources in writing the book included the Bible, recent news releases and the John Birch Society, adding that he also studied current events a great deal.

Anti-Christ and the return of Cedric Klein works diligently at typing the revision of his novel, "In the Night Visions." The book is a fictional version of the return of Jesus Christ.

Jesus maintain the focus of his fictional version on how the future may come to pass; he noted.

The main plot, explained the author, deals with the Illuminati manipulating the world to put an Anti-Christ in power, Christ then taking the Christians into heaven while the Anti-Christ rules for seven years. After which, Christ comes back and takes over.

The book, noted Cedric, took approximately a year to write with an additional year spent on a revision after a printing company turned it down for being too short and lacking in detail. The senior added he plans to make a career of writing Christian literature.

Hatton brushes up

For painting purposes, landscapes and wildlife served as favorites for senior Jim Hatton.

Jim entered such contests as L.S. Ayres, the Woman's Club and the 4-H fair.

He won a Women's Club art contest and received ribbons for his works of art entered in the fair.

Although the senior had relatives interested in art, his talent for the field was aroused when he competed with a friend in grade school to see who was the better artist.

The most difficult depiction ever undertaken by the painter involved a portrait, according to Jim.

Jim painted in the basement of his house and used mediums ranging from oil paint to chalk.

Jim stated he enjoyed painting but added that it would remain only as a hobby for the future Dr. Hatton, since he plans a career as a general practitioner.

Essay results in eastern tour

Justifying why she would be a good delegate to the United Nations earned junior Holly Anderson a spot on the Pilgrimage for Youth Tour.

Holly achieved the privilege of being the only delegate chosen from the Madison area.

The trip, sponsored by the Oddfellow's Club, enabled Holly and 34 colleagues to visit such places as the Besty Ross House and Gettysburg, both in Pennsylvania, in addition to numerous monuments and the Smithsonian Institute in Washington D.C. The band member also observed the changing of the guard in Washington.

While in New York, Holly visited a restaurant similar to the one seen on Saturday Night Live. "It was as if you were there on the set with John Belushi and Dan Ackroyd. Everyone yelling, 'cheeseburger-cheeseburger!'" exclaimed Holly.

Once in New York the Madison representative mixed with other delegates from different states for site seeing adventures.

The FFA treasurer recalled she saw a Broadway Play titled "Danc'in" and went shopping at the famous Macy's and Saks' stores on Fifth Avenue.

Once at the United Nations the delegates sat in on talks by speakers from all over the world and viewed movies on problems in the United States and what other countries are doing about their issues. After each speech, delegates were permitted to ask questions about the different countries and discussion.

The skating bug strikes again

Junior Chuck Cosby, like many other students, got stung by the roller skating bug.

Chuck, who worked at the local skating rink, stated that he became interested in skating by watching Eddie Sublett do his work-outs.

"One day I stayed after closing, asked Eddie to teach me how to skate and he agreed to," commented Chuck.

Chuck noted that when one starts to roller skate he should master the basic steps, such as forward and backward skating before he attempts to try some of the more difficult tactics to the sport.

Charlotte Willick and Debbie

Junior Chuck Cosby circles the local roller rink to warm up for the more advanced techniques. Whereas skateboarding was the fad a couple years ago, roller skating became the current rage.

Johnson, mentioned Chuck, helped him to perfect his doubles skating dexterities.

"A skater can learn various techniques with a partner, which he can not do alone," stated the newly interested skater.

Even though Chuck had only been skating for approximately five months he had conquered most of the fundamentals to the activity and began to work on such achievements as 360 degree turns, different types of jumps and the splits.

In recent years roller skating had been thought of as a kid sport, but this year it reached a new peak. Such stars as Cher even opened up a roller skating disco, which was very popular and motivated others to do the same.

Self-defense oriental style

In recent years, interest revived in the art of oriental self-defense. Juijitsu, judo, kungfu and karate all attracted enormous attention, even in Madison.

Dale Edworthy, a sophomore, included himself among those learning the art of karate.

Starting two years ago, Dale said he chose to involve himself in the craft as he had just moved to Madison and thought it would help him in meeting people and making new friends. He added that he learned some karate when he lived in Michigan and wanted to learn more.

Dale noted that he took karate lessons at a local club. While he then had a green belt, which was midway between the beginning white belt and the black belt, the sophomore remarked that he was working for the brown belt, qualifying him to teach karate. The sophomore noted he intends to continue until he gets the black belt.

Although he does not usually resort to using karate outside of class, Dale mentioned he would only use his skill of the art if forced to, which has only occurred a couple of occasions.

Dale stated that karate helps his coordination and sense of balance. He continued that he may find karate useful in the future as he is considering joining a police academy or the Marines.

Dale added that karate lessons cost $20 a month and occur two nights a week. However, he noted the more dedicated students work out almost every night.

As we started off a new school year we saw our teachers as people who were there to help us prepare for a new road ahead. We sometimes neglected to remember they were real people too, with interests and hobbies outside of school, just as we had. But as the school year progressed, occasionally we found ourselves skipping lunch or staying after class talking to them about the day's events or about the teachers themselves. By the time school was over, we had made new friends with whom we could share ideas, problems and victories. We realized these new friends had more wisdom and knowledge than our ol'chums. And most of all we viewed our new friends . . . as real people.

The feeling of anticipation and suspense, which sparks any sports season, increased this year. People wondered how the '80s would open with six new coaches. Football's new coach Mr. Jim Kaczmarek led his team to its best record in years. Mr. Bert Zimmerman witnessed his four member relay competing at state, and viewed freestyle swimmer Beth Ricketts winning the state event. Mr. Ed Schienbein undertook the task of coaching girls varsity basketball. His team went to the final game of the regional, igniting its spirit under Indiana All-Star Carla Eades. The junior varsity team experienced coaching changes too, when Mr. Mike Modisett filled in mid-season after the resignation of new coach, Miss Karen Modisett. Boys varsity basketball tested its third coach in four years, under the leadership of Mr. Gary Merrell.

Sports with the same coaches boasted their victories as well. The volleyball and cross country teams advanced to the regionals. Another fall sport, girls' golf, was introduced for the first time. Four wrestlers represented the team at a semi-state match, while dedicated swimmer Chris Bear shocked the school by shaving his head for the state meet. A rainy, and even snowy spring, threatened to dampen the fired spirits of the track, girls' tennis and baseball teams. The teams rescheduled events and showed impressive records in the end.

RING UP

Back for more

Old coaches never die, they just keep coming back for more, or the "Duke" does anyway. Mr. Paul Meyer better known as the "Duke" by his friends and colleagues returned to the MCHS football field for another year of action.

The Ball State graduate started the first team at Madison in 1960. The first record of the team was also one to remember. The "Duke" led the Cubs in a 21 game losing streak before ever winning one. Recalling his first record, "We tried pretty hard each and every game, just like the guys did this year."

Mr. Jim Kaczmarek is a super coach and person, noted the former coach, adding Madison has the "man now to push them on."

Seniors Bob Backus, John McIntire, Kyle Shadley, Randy Greves, Scott Lee and sophomore Mark Furnish were presented trophies of achievement at the annual football banquet.

Assistant coach Roger Gallatin assures senior Cub Bob Backus that the Cub team can hold up through the biggest and best of them, because Madison has got a team that works like a team.

Team ignites fire

The '79 school year will long be remembered when the talk centers on FOOTBALL.

New coaches, dramatic touchdowns and glory-filled wins resulted in the mighty word of a winner... T-E-A-M-W-O-R-K.

Mr. Jim Kaczmarek, newly appointed head coach, brought with him from his Hanover College coaching experience exactly what was needed for the Fighting Cubs... determination, self-respect and the most deadly ammunition to bomb a football field, teamwork.

Former coaches Mr. Paul "Duke" Meyer, Mr. Roger Gallatin and Mr. Ed Schienbein returned to action this year to assist Mr. Kaczmarek in building a good solid foundation for the approaching year.

"You could not ask for three finer men to work with," noted the head coach.

The expectations for the long and awaited win had not yet been seen as the squad carried on 0-6 record into the Homecoming game, against the Floyd Central Highlanders.

Along with the usual excitement of the special evening, came an added feature attraction. With a score of 10-0, the Red Rage brought an added glimmer of festivities onto the cold and muddy field winning the first victory in 20 starts.

The 20 long game losing streak marked the third longest in the state of Indiana and placed just one game from the second longest losing team.

The Cubs held one big win under their helmets now and nothing got in their way in making the rest of the year 'one to remember.'

Lawrenceburg, ranked in the state, jolted the team one week later with an 0-20 victory, but the spirit and determination stood strong and firm still going after win number two.

The turning point for the Cubs happened in the sweaty hot locker room of the Bloomington North Stars. Down by a score of 0-28, Madison got a pep talk that could probably top even a presidential address.

With the final score of 0-35, the Cubs played the best game of the whole year while also suffering their worst defeat.

Finishing the season with a 3-7 record, Madison finally got a sweet taste of victory.

"And then you split right up the middle." Assistant coach Mr. Paul Meyer goes over the plays of the game with junior Tim and Greg Konkle, who both started on the varsity squad.

The Bedford North Lawrence Star seems to be delivering a nose twister to senior Cub Kyle Shadley, who does not seem to be at all impressed with the idea or gesture at hand.

Senior John Garlinghouse and sophomore Tony Searcy watch attentively from the sidelines during one of Madison's games. John has served as manager for the Cubs for the last three years.

Cub winners . .

Honors and awards remained in store for the fans and team as Madison had three players selected for the Hoosier Hills All-Conference football team. Seniors Scott Lee, Randy Greves and Tim Souley qualified for first team honors while Mark Bishop achieved honorable mention.

Junior varsity experienced its fair share of glory posting a 3-5 season. The Little Cubs, after having lost their first two games, pulled an easy victory over the Columbus East Olympians. "The junior varsity team had a really fine season and worked hard all year round," stated Mr. Kaczmarek, who also served as reserve coach.

The awards banquet was an evening in order to present the well-earned awards to the deserving players.

Scott was voted Most Valuable Player for the varsity, while sophomore Mark Furnish accepted the MVP award for the Little Cubs. Awards were also presented to John McIntire, Most Valuable Back; Randy, Most Valuable Lineman; Curt Jacobs, Most Improved Player; Bob Backus, 110% Mental Attitude Award; Kyle Shadley, Academic Excellence Award.

"The fans and spirit from parents and students alike played an important role throughout the season," noted Mr. Kaczmarek, who also gave special recognition to senior John Garlinghouse, sophomore Dave Whisman, Russell Sullivan and Jeff Knox, who served as managers for the team.

Junior Tim Davis had an outstanding season rushing for a total of 511 yards, 300 of them coming in the last three games.

The team started with two goals in mind to reach during the year. One being to score every time within the 10 yard line, the other just being able to win. They did accomplish both of their goals, scoring every time but once within the 10 yard line and if one was there on Homecoming night he knows Madison did pull off a couple of wins.

Cubs refuse to share crown, capture No. 8

The girls' volleyball team ended its regular season on a high note by winning its eighth consecutive sectional title.

To achieve this annual goal, the girls pulled together to defeat four strong sectional foes. In preliminary competition, the team began its climb to the top by beating Shawne 15-2, 15-1; New Washington 15-3, 15-6; and Southwestern 15-9, 15-3. In the championship game, the Cubs rolled over Scottsburg 15-7, 10-15, 15-7.

In regional competition, however, the Cubs bowed to Providence in their first match, 10-15, 13-15. Overall, the varsity had a 16-9 season, with the junior varsity finishing with a 8-9 slate.

Coach Mary Louise Eisenhardt cited Susan Goodlett and Maggie Lueders top servers for the varsity and junior varsity respectively. Susan successfully served 203 out of 214 serves for a 94.8 percentage. She also led the team in scoring with 143 points.

Maggie led the junior varsity squad with 116 for 126 good serves for a 92.0 percentage. Michelle Reed led the junior varsity in scoring with 78 points.

In the Hoosier Hills Conference tourney, the Cubs placed third out of eight teams. The Columbus East team took top honors, with Jennings County securing second and New Albany fourth.

Cub player Heidi Isom (12) and Kim Burke (18) prepare to assist as Becky Hall (25) leaps high to send the ball reeling toward the front line to be sent back to the other side.

After the tournament, the All-Conference team was selected by coaches of participating schools. Madison's Carla Eades was voted all-conference material.

At the fall sports banquet, Coach Eisenhardt cited Michelle, Maggie, Mary Beth Kring and Holly Gallatin as the top junior varsity players.

Top varsity awards went to Linda Bird, most valuable defensive player; Carla, most valuable offensive player; and Susan, highest serving percentage. Maggie received the highest serving percentage award for the junior varsity.

Heidi Isen captured two awards banquet night, taking both the most valuable player and the mental attitude award.

The name of the game is . . . "LUV"

Under the leadership of new tennis coach Mark Cheatham, the boys tennis team completed its season winning six matches out of 13.

Coach Cheatham stated this being his first year as coach, his expectations for the team resembled a shot in the dark.

He stated he did not know what to expect, since tennis proves to be a control game and each game shows different aspects for each individual. The coach added that strategy plays a certain role in each game, but as before it's confirmed to be as individual as each player.

As for the weather, nice, clear and sunny days sprinkled the tennis courts for the Cubs, only having one game that was canceled due to rain.

Two top players who led the team and finished very strong at the end of the year consisted of senior Matt Webster and junior Steve Schmidt. These two boys led in both mental and physical abilities throughout the season, according to Mr. Cheatham.

The boys started early with practices since the season began Aug. 31. Senior Scott Freeman and sophomore David Ferguson turned in the best winning percentages throughout the season both having an 8-4 record. Coach Cheatham commented that senior Scott Frazier showed good potential and added to the team.

Junior Steve Furnish and David combined together to make a dynamic doubles team and played very well, especially with good control at the net, stated the coach. Junior Allan Fitzpatrick and junior David Sherman rounded out the other doubles team for the Cubs.

Coach Cheatham said Columbus East seemed to be the toughest team for Madison. They defeated the Cubs by a 0-5 score, the only team to complete such a task. The coach stated competition during the season was very good. Several of Madison's defeats were lost in close decisions, coming down to the final point which decided the victors of the match.

Madison's high hopes of winning the sectionals came to a sudden halt when Madison fell to Hauser by a mere 2-3 score.

For many of the racketeers, tennis started out to be just a game of laughter and fun until determination and devotion conquered their minds with "LUV."

by Heidi Ison

Whoops! That seems to be what juniors Steve Furnish and David Ferguson were thinking as the sun totally blinds Steve while performing a slam. The two combined to make a dynamic Cub team.

Senior Matt Webster displays unique form as he meets the ball with a new type of tennis shot. Matt, a leading rocketeer, has been a very strong competitor for the Cubs this season.

Much concentration takes place before senior Scott Freeman begins to swing backhand to put a great spin on the ball with high hopes of getting that winning point.

Senior Scott Frazier's face fills with much frustration after playing in a tough match. Scott, a veteran, played two years previously with the varsity Cubs.

The sky remained a mass of darkness, as the cross country runner came to life in the wee morning hours, beginning his day with a good three or four mile run across the dew covered earth.

Then off with the tennis shoes and on to school, where eight continuous hours of education took place in order for him to practice with the team after school. He then got the chance to test his endurance a little bit more to see if seven to 10 miles across the blistering hot pavement would qualify him for a chance at the finish line in the upcoming season.

The team started in mid-July, with temperatures in the high 80's, to condition their bodies for the rough 2.5 mile courses ahead.

The beginning of the season started with a slight blow when the Cubs lost to a tough Salem squad by a mere one point difference, leaving both Coach Lou Knoble and his runners with a lot of big expectations about the rest of the year.

The unknowing did not last long though, when just seven days later the team put five top runners across the finish line to beat the Scottsburg Warriors 15-41.

Bobby Courtney, who was the No. 1 runner, broke two records this year at both home and away meets. With the fantastic time of 13:02, Bobby broke the Jennings County course record by :12 seconds. If one record was not good enough, Bobby went on to prove he was definitely a state contender by breaking the Sunrise course record, with a time of 12:36 during the rainy, cold Jefferson County Invitational. The junior took the overall individual winner's trophy.

Bobby was not alone in carrying the team forward. Junior Jack Lacy, also a state contender, was the No. 2 runner on the team, after having a slow start in the beginning of the year.

Bobby and Jack were both selected to the All-Conference team during the Hoosier Hills Conference, with the whole team taking a fourth place finish.

The trophy case was not loaded with a lot of first place trophies but the team remained a constant threat for the sectional championship.

Bobby, Jack and seniors John Stom were the only three team runners to make it out of the sectionals into the regionals where all three of them did an excellent job.

Lady Cubs lead way in dual competition

The powerful girls swim team capped off another successful season with Coach Bert Zimmerman calling it "the second best dual year in Madison history."

The Cubs defeated six out of eight opponents in dual competition, second only to the 1978 record of seven wins in eight dual meets.

In sectionals, the team qualified in three events to become eligible to swim at the state meet. Qualifying for the meet were Beth Ricketts in the 50 yard freestyle, Shelly Anderson in the 100 yard freestyle, and the 400 free relay made up of Beth, Shelly, Ann Schlichte and Sally Henderson.

Coach Zimmerman praised the girls for a fine effort saying that many of the girls registered the best times of their careers.

In the state meet, the Cubs turned in their best performance ever. The 400 free relay placed eighth with a time of 3:52.3. Shelly placed 13th in the 100 free qualifying as the first alternate for the finals.

Beth's performance highlighted the two day meet for the Cubs, capturing first place in the 50-yard freestyle event to become the first swimmer from Madison ever to be a state champion. She won the 50 free in 25.3 seconds, only 2 seconds off of the state record.

This effort, according to Coach Zimmerman, produced the best finish ever by the girls team in the state meet. The team scored 35 points and finished 16th out of 85 teams participating.

The girls experienced many exciting and memorable moments during their winning

Shawny Anderson recounted her most memorable moment when she posted her lifetime best in the 100 yard freestyle at the Columbus East meet. Shawny said she was happy because she "almost beat Cindy Galyen," a swimmer from Columbus East.

Michele Taylor, a new face on the team this year, recalled her most exciting moment was finishing the 500 yard freestyle, which consists of a grueling 20 lengths.

At the fall awards banquet, Beth was named most valuable swimmer. The most valuable senior award went to Shelly, with most valuable junior going home with Kim Williams. Sally was presented the most valuable sophomore award, and Darragh Stewart captured the most valuable freshman award.

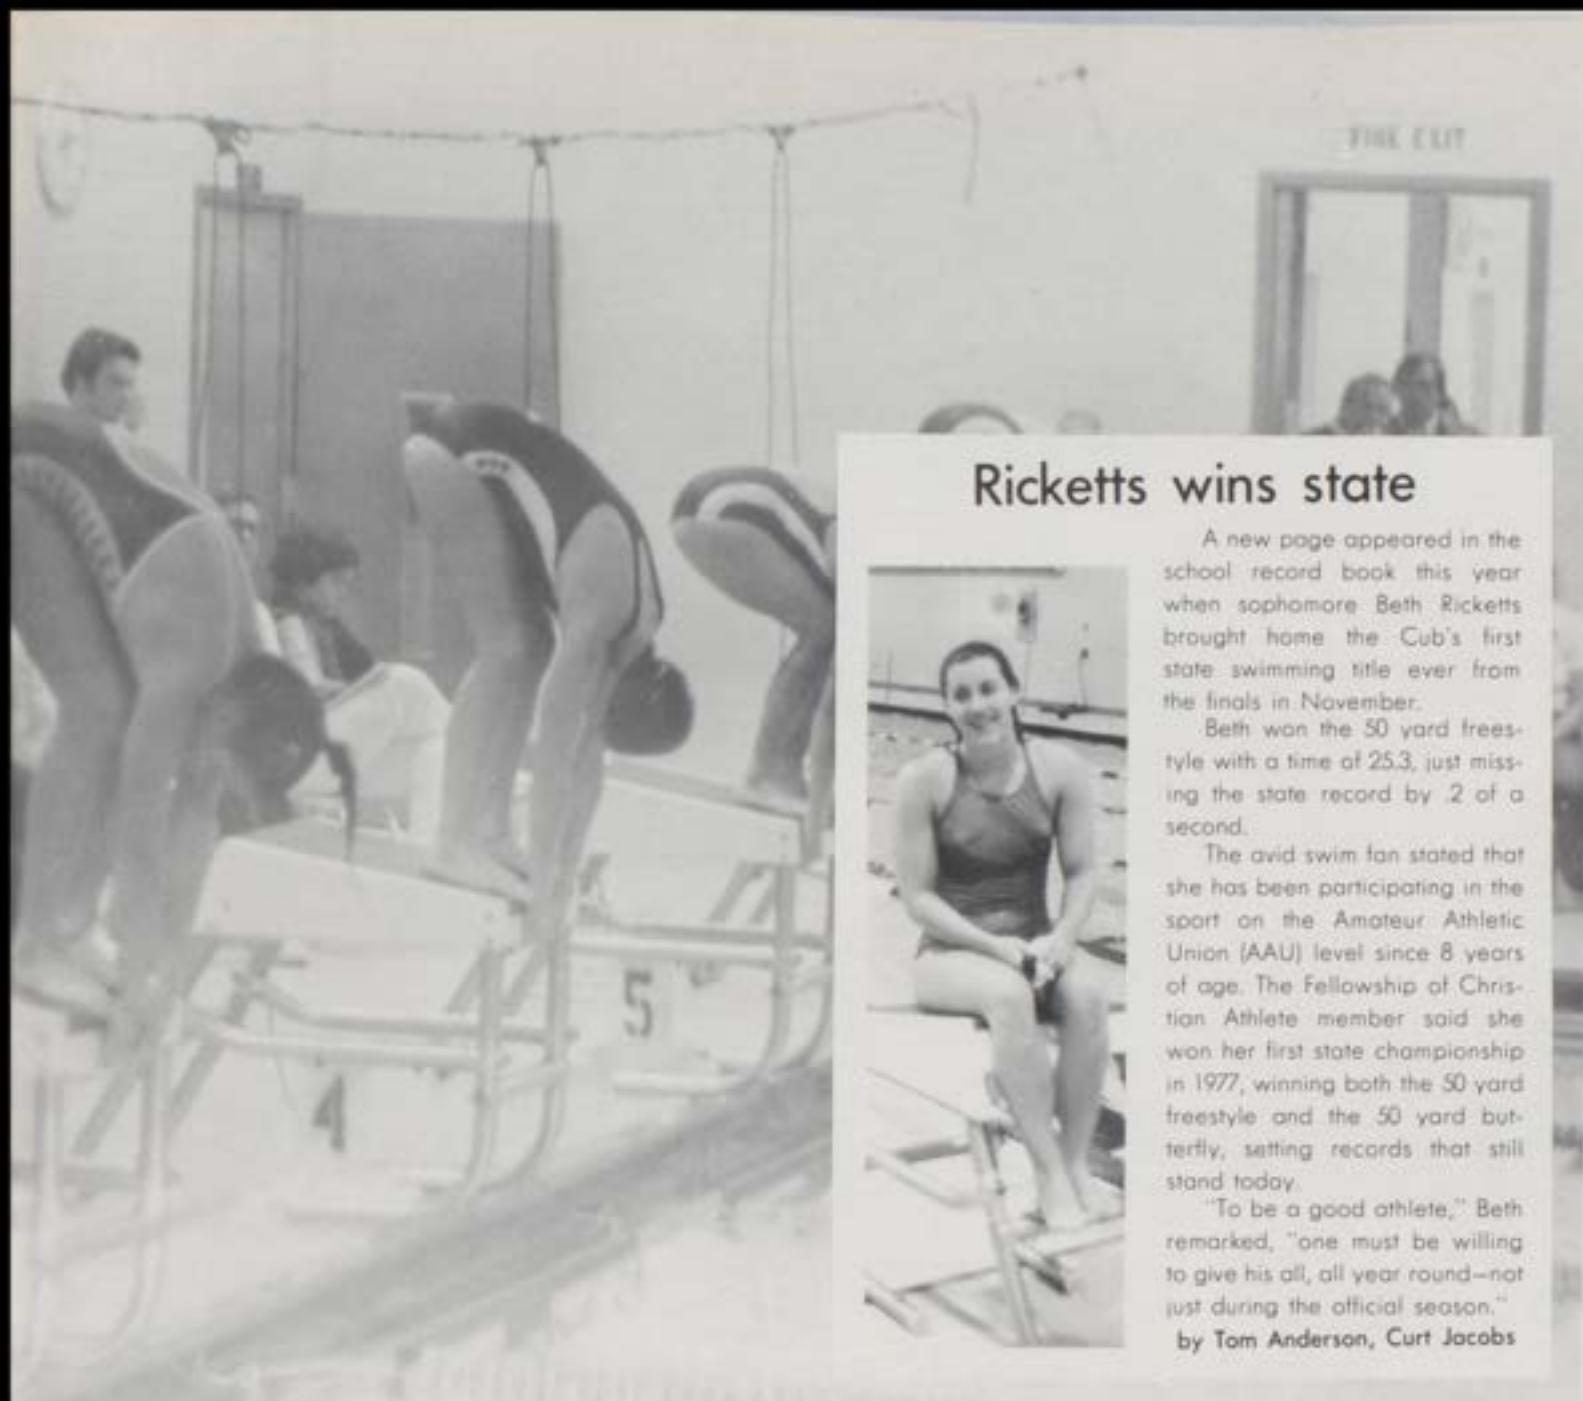

The state participants certificates awarded by the Indiana High School Athletic Association were received by Shelly, Beth, Ann and Sally.

Ricketts wins state

A new page appeared in the school record book this year when sophomore Beth Ricketts brought home the Cub's first state swimming title ever from the finals in November.

Beth won the 50 yard freestyle with a time of 25.3, just missing the state record by 2 of a second.

The avid swim fan stated that she has been participating in the sport on the Amateur Athletic Union (AAU) level since 8 years of age. The Fellowship of Christian Athlete member said she won her first state championship in 1977, winning both the 50 yard freestyle and the 50 yard butterfly, setting records that still stand today.

"To be a good athlete," Beth remarked, "one must be willing to give his all, all year round—not just during the official season."

Did you say religious 'jock'?

Religion and sports...not a likely combination in most people's minds. No wonder—while attending a sporting event, the crowd often observes hostile glances, backed with flying fists and muttered curses. But, do such actions represent the whole team? While Christians on Madison teams readily admit they are in the minority, they proclaim religion in sports remains alive and well.

One thing the spectator never sees, or notices, are the athletes with head bowed in humble prayer. Christians and fellow players alike join together as a team for prayer, prior to running on the football field, gathering on the volleyball court or hitting the wrestling mat.

Carla Eades explained she says her own prayer before her games, noting, "It gives me courage to go out there, because I know the Lord is on my side."

Rather than praying to win, wrestler Eric Jones said, "If I lose, it's okay, because I know I did my best, and the only one I have to please is God."

Prayer also serves as the chief tool for keeping in touch with God during the game. Heidi Isom indicated that if she is playing a poor game, she simply nods her head in the middle of the volleyball court. An observant spectator, therefore, can often spot a Christian player.

John McIntire pointed out that even with prayer, it can become hard to maintain a Christian attitude during games, due to the surroundings. Other players tend to cuss and cut down teammates and opponents. The football captain said this results in "not enough unity." Although it may be difficult being one of a few Christians on the team, believers state they have never been "hassled" by teammates. Preacher's daughter Lisa Horner attributed this to the fact that the non-religious "respect" the Christians.

"It gives me courage to go out there, because I know the Lord is on my side."

The Christian athletes say they have attempted to influence team members by their attitudes. One boy reflected positive results—a fellow player has become a Christian. On the other hand, Mark Storm noted, "Somebody has to want it to rub off on them before it does any good."

Besides group prayer, none of the school teams participate in any religious activities together. In fact, several people added that games and practices even interfere with church activities.

One non-school organization, however—Fellowship of Christian Athletes—grants individual religious players a time to gather as friends under Christ's name. The group meets every other week at a member's home, providing an opportunity for in-depth Bible study, singing, games and a problem sharing time. Enthusiastic members give time to the Big Brother, Big Sister program, where teenagers take an underprivileged child to the park, the movies, or a picnic or other places. The group also travels by bus to places such as Gatlinburg, Tennessee and Washington, D.C.

Mark Horne of the swim team explained FCA gave people an opportunity to go on trips where they could become closer to God, and each other, while "putting Christianity in athletics."

Religion and sports...they go together after all. The next time you are a spectator, take note of a player who seems to be merely meditating, or one who refrains from saying obscenities or another who encourages teammates during a low point. You might just have found a 'jock' who relies on the coach on the sidelines.

Shawny Anderson devotes her attention to reading the Bible for the allotted half hour in-depth scripture study time during the December fellowship of Christian Athletes meeting.

Coaches overlook Lady Cubs

The Lady Cubs experienced one small problem this year.

It seemed no matter what they did or who they beat, the ladies just could not get ranked in the state's top 20 teams.

The agency that determines state rankings randomly selected coaches to evaluate the teams, thus resulting in many teams being overlooked.

However, the coach said he felt Madison did not intentionally get overlooked. The girls' squad finished regular season play with a 13-2 record. Four more wins in post season play, three sectionals and one regional, later brought the final record to 17-3, a best ever for Madison girls.

Coach Ed Schienbein attributed the ranking problem to the fact "girls basketball is not as recognized a sport as it deserves to be."

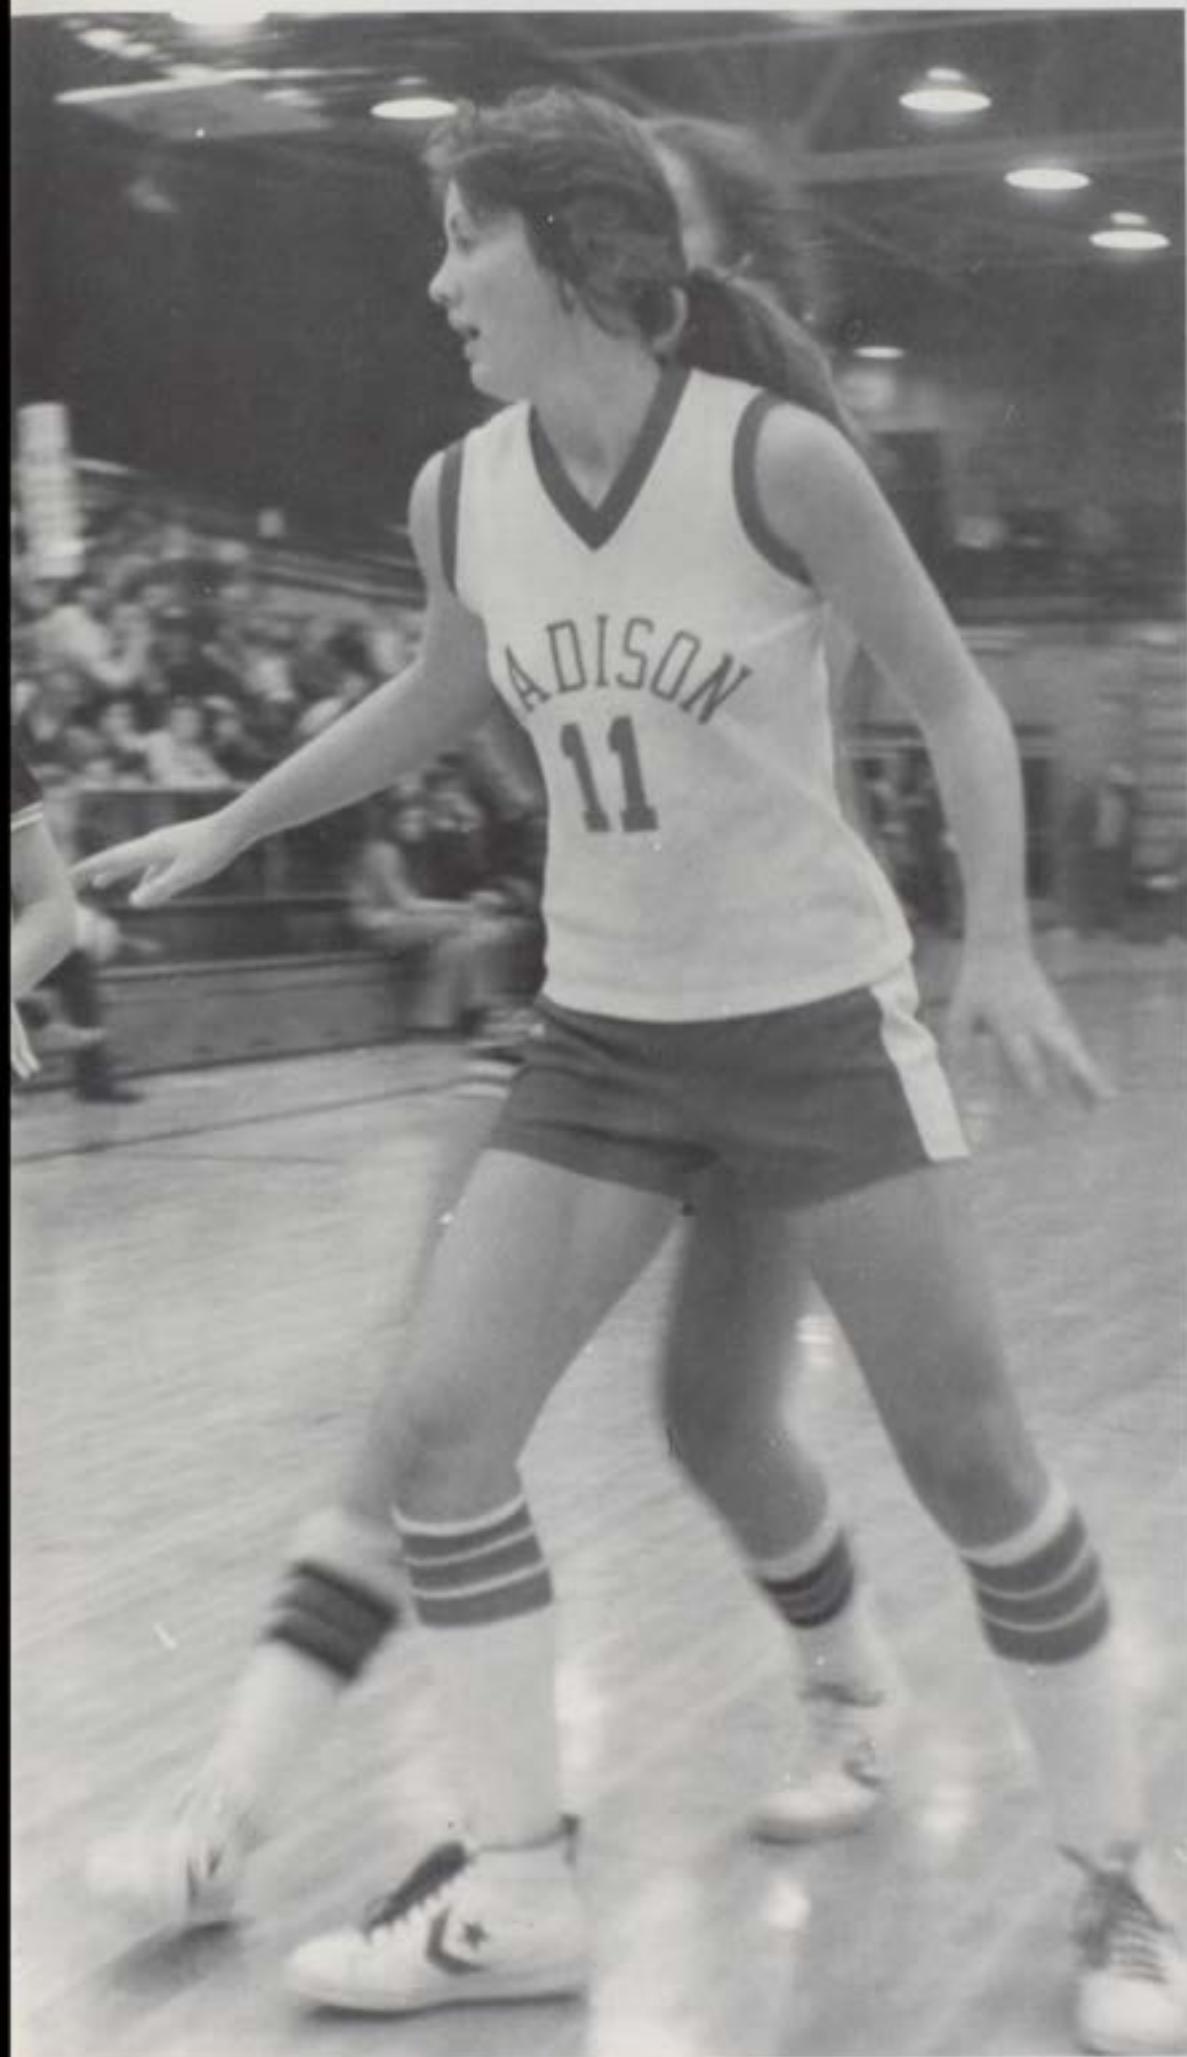

Media catches most of the blame for this, since scores frequently are not reported in any newspapers outside of the local area, the coach noted, adding the lack of publicity definitely hurts as far as ranking goes.

The ladies definitely proved this as they defeated many ranked teams, losing only to 14th ranked Floyd Central and ninth ranked Columbus East by one point each. The Cubs' only other loss developed when Paoli upset them 55-44 in the championship game of the regionals, where the girls literally fell apart.

The coach mentioned the non-ranking never bothered him, but that it did affect fans and many of the girls.

Many players stayed up late at night, more than once, just to see if they had made the grade -> and become one of the top 20 teams. The news always developed into a big, big let down.

Senior Kathy Dugle (11) displays her defensive talents by blocking a Jennings County opponent during the fourth quarter action. The Lady Cubs defeated the North Vernon team by a margin of 17 points.

Lady Cubs . . .

Senior Kathy Dugle commented on her many late night vigils. Kathy said it was always a "real bummer" to stay up late so many times, always with the same result, no ranking for the Cubs.

At the post season tournament in Scottsburg, the Lady Cubs showed everyone they deserved a top 20 ranking. The first people to hear how good they were was the team from Austin that was ranked 20th. The girls pulled away in the early going but Austin's Eagles fought back many times to make it a very exciting, close game. The Cubs held on to win 50-47. After that win, the ladies took the sectional championship with easy wins over Southwestern 70-31, and a young but scrappy Scottsburg team 78-48.

During the three game affair, senior Carla Eades maintained an average of 31 points per game with Linda Bird backing her up with a 20 point average. Four of Madison's starting five made the all-sectional team. Most people wondered how Kathy could have been overlooked. She had the third highest average on the team, eight points, and also was six of eight at the charity stripe. The girls that did make the team were Carla, Jill Muensterman, Linda, and Heidi Isen. This went to show the strength that the girls possessed this year.

In the opening game of the regional at Floyd Central, Madison and Jeffersonville, two very closely matched teams, played four tough quarters of very close and exciting basketball. Every quarter was important, every change of possession the ball changed the lead. The Lady Cubs, behind a great team effort according to Coach Schienbein pulled out a scary one-point, 54-53 win to advance to the championship game where they met their downfall.

Eades makes All-Star team

The Lady Cubs compiled an impressive record of 17-3 during the season, accomplishing their goal through teamwork and dedication. Indeed the most celebrated player on the team was senior Carla Eades.

Carla, who first played on the varsity her sophomore year, has been playing basketball since third or fourth grade. Scouted by several recruiters, at the close of the school year she noted she plans to play college ball, but had not decided where.

Carla led the team in scoring average, with 23.4 per game. This was the third consecutive year that she has led in that department. Carla also led the Cubs in rebounding, assists and free throw averages.

Carla scored the most points in one game by totalling 39, plus attained the most assists in one game with 12 and secured the most freethrows in a row, not to mention hauling in a season high of 16 rebounds in one game.

Carla said that she enjoyed her sophomore and senior years the best. She noted her sophomore year rated special because the team went to semi-state, but as one views her career it becomes obvious her senior year was also special.

She led her team to a successful 17-3 mark which included a sectional victory. In her final high school year, Carla realized her greatest goal to date. Sportswriters named her to the Indiana All-Star team, which made her eligible to play in the Indiana-Kentucky girls All-Star game.

When fans look at Carla's stats, they might think she was the whole team.

Carla refuted this idea best when she said, "If it hadn't been for the other girls, I wouldn't have had the chance to attempt these goals. For the chance, I thank them all."

'Rebuilding season' slows down swim team

The boy's swim team went through its second consecutive year of rebuilding and according to Coach Bert Zimmerman, the squad attained 60 percent of what they needed for a successful team. The coach noted Madison's 7-4 record, which was raised from a 6-5 slate because of New Albany's use of an ineligible swimmer, was a very good record for any rebuilding team.

"If our guys stick with it, we will be in good shape two to three years from now," Mr. Zimmerman added. Many young swimmers competed this year, with team captains Mike Henderson, a senior, and Chris Bear, a returning junior, leading the way.

Chris, who was the unanimous choice for most valuable swimmer, placed high in the Hoosier Hills Conference meet with a second place finish in the 200 yard freestyle and a third place finish in the 100 yard freestyle. In sectional competition, Chris won the 100 yard freestyle with a time of :50.3, gaining revenge on the two swimmers who edged him out of the conference title. Chris placed 15th in the race at state.

The team, according to Coach Zimmerman, engaged in only 11 meets this year, compared to larger schools which compete in 25-30.

No, it's not put your hands up or I'll shoot; it's just senior varsity cheerleader Dee Dee Alexander leading the Madison fans in a spirited cheer at an away game in Seymour.

Arms shaped in V forms stand for a hope of victory, at least this seems to be why the junior varsity cheerleaders are yelling. It worked too, for the Little Cubs won 49-36.

The Madison varsity cheerleaders put the final touches on this floor cheer so to root the varsity basketball team on to a win. Only the Cubs were defeated by the Seymour Owls by 56-57.

Leanna Taylor, varsity cheerleader, proudly displays a smile of joy during a Cub football game. The senior has been a cheerleader ever since grade school.

Linda Welch, junior varsity yell-leader, looks disgusted at the pep club, but actually is only playing her role in order to do the "Get It, Got It, Good" cheer correctly.

We did it! That seems to be thought running through the minds of three varsity cheerleaders and five senior guy helpers as Nancy Craig mounts herself atop the finished pyramid.

Being a cheerleader demanded having a lot of enthusiasm and spirit at all times. The squads frequently proved this when they made cake and cookies for the football team. During the winter holidays, the squads gave good luck charms, such as pennies and Christmas stockings saying, "We Will Win," to the basketball team.

As time changes, so do things such as advisors and policies. After the retirement of former sponsor Mrs. Lorraine Zimmerman last year, Principal Bill Rector and Director of Student Affairs Roger Gallatin acted as co-sponsors throughout the entire football season. Shortly after the basketball season began, Mrs. Ruth Merrell, wife of head basketball coach Gary Merrell, took over the supervision of the cheerleaders.

Another change this year involved the new election policy set up by Student Council. Tryouts were performed before a select group, with the cheerleaders meeting all the requirements outlined in the IHSAA rule book. From this Mr. Gallatin stated the cheerleaders resembled an athletic team and are not elected by student popular vote.

Although most cheerleaders are elected for a full year, problems can and do arise. For instance, senior varsity cheerleader Lisa Roberts cheered throughout the football season before retiring her position to alternate Cathy Chilton. Then after two basketball games, problems arose again and Cathy retired her position to Rhonda. The disadvantage of changing cheerleaders undoubtedly means a loss of practice time and inexperience of cheering together in unity. However these girls overcame the ups and downs.

February terminates Cub luck

A young Cub team rolled right along in the beginning, leaving a rewarding line of victories behind until the terrible tragedy struck. The curse went by the name February.

Without the cold, winter month on the schedule, the team would have attained a 9-4 record, but with the month included the Cubs bowed out with a 9-12 record for the year.

Southwestern became the first victim of the year when new coach Gary Merrell watched his boys put away the Rebels with a score of 67-63. After the first victory came a slight downfall as the Cubs fell to Jennings County, Jeffersonville and Bedford North Lawrence before they ever got the ball back on the right bounce.

The team consisted of only one senior, Randy Greves, eight juniors and three sophomores. The lack of experience on the playing court contributed a major weakness at first but the Cubs started to pull themselves together and came up with a second dynamic win over arch rivals of Hanover 68-57.

One win over the Rebels seemed fantastic in its own right, but now the young boys were becoming experienced and were playing the fastest and hardest that they could. It was apparent the win had ignited a spark that grew in to an unbelievable five game winning streak. Southwestern was followed by Shelbyville, Floyd Central, Silver Creek and Bloomington North.

Well all good things must come to an end and that is what the curse had planned for the Cubs. Junior pivotman Tony Povaleri suffered a ruptured disc and had to sit on the sidelines and watch his teammates undergo a seven game losing streak before bowing to the Shawne Hilltoppers in the sectionals for the first time in school history.

Senior Randy Greves launches into the air in order to battle for a rebound. Being the only senior on the team, Randy played the father image of the team and in doing so earned the nickname of "Daddy Greves."

Junior Tony Povolen's face reflects concentration in shooting a successful free-throw. Number 40 was one of the great talents on the court and that was probably the reason Tony received the MVP award.

No. 30, Ken Macy, rubs a few elbows with a tough Jennings County opponent in a close game where, unfortunately, the Panthers came out on top by three points. The junior played the forward position.

Up, Up and away! The boy's basketball team started off the year with a "soap and towel" game. The team was divided up into two divisions and played as if in real competition.

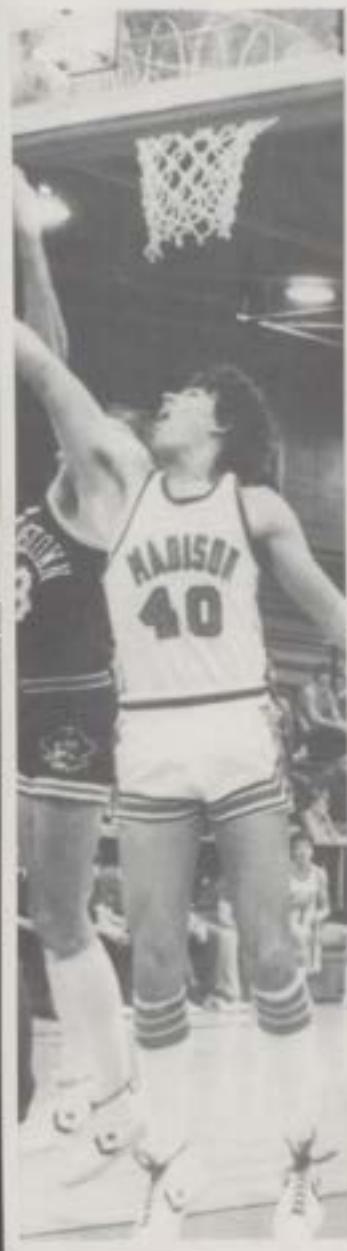

During the soap and towel scrimmage game, preceding the opening game of the season, junior varsity members Todd Willett, Mark Furnish and Bryan Everett await a foul shot.

Head coach Mr. Gary Merrill used the pre-season basketball game, between the boys on the team to get a summary of what to expect out of the coming year as a first year coach at Madison.

Pivot-man Tony Pavalet seems to be experiencing a little trouble on the defensive rebound, but as the saying goes, may the best man win. The junior led the Cubs in rebounds this year with 249.

Junior Phil Love keeps the ball under steady control as he waits for the perfect chance to put the moves on his opponent. Phil was awarded the free throw award by Mite Federal and Savings and Loan.

February terminates . . .

"With Tony in the lineup we got to thinking we couldn't be beat, we had all the confidence in the world. As soon as he was not able to play we lost our confidence and were never able to get it back," noted Mr. Merrell.

As the saying goes, "every team needs a bench," and junior Robbie Whiteford was just that. Known to the coach and fans as "super-sub," Robbie netted in double figures 10 times and had his all time high with 22 points against Bloomington North.

The season was one of many upsets and headaches but somehow the team had won the fans over and beating the Rebels "twice" in one season was enough to make the team loved even if they did have some bad times.

The junior varsity team, coached by Mr. Jim Gavin, closed the year with a 9-11 overall record.

Sophomore Mike Hill earned the Most Valuable Player Award leading the team in total points and he was also the top rebounder. Chari Chilton turned in a year of fine defensive playing and could only be explained by his coach as adding spark to the team whenever they were down. Sophomore Jeff Everidge was awarded the free throw award with a .77 average for the year.

Coach Gavin watched his team lose by a one point margin to the Rebels in the first game of the season with a 46-47 score. The most ironic thing being that the team lost the last game of the season too, again by a one point margin to Franklin.

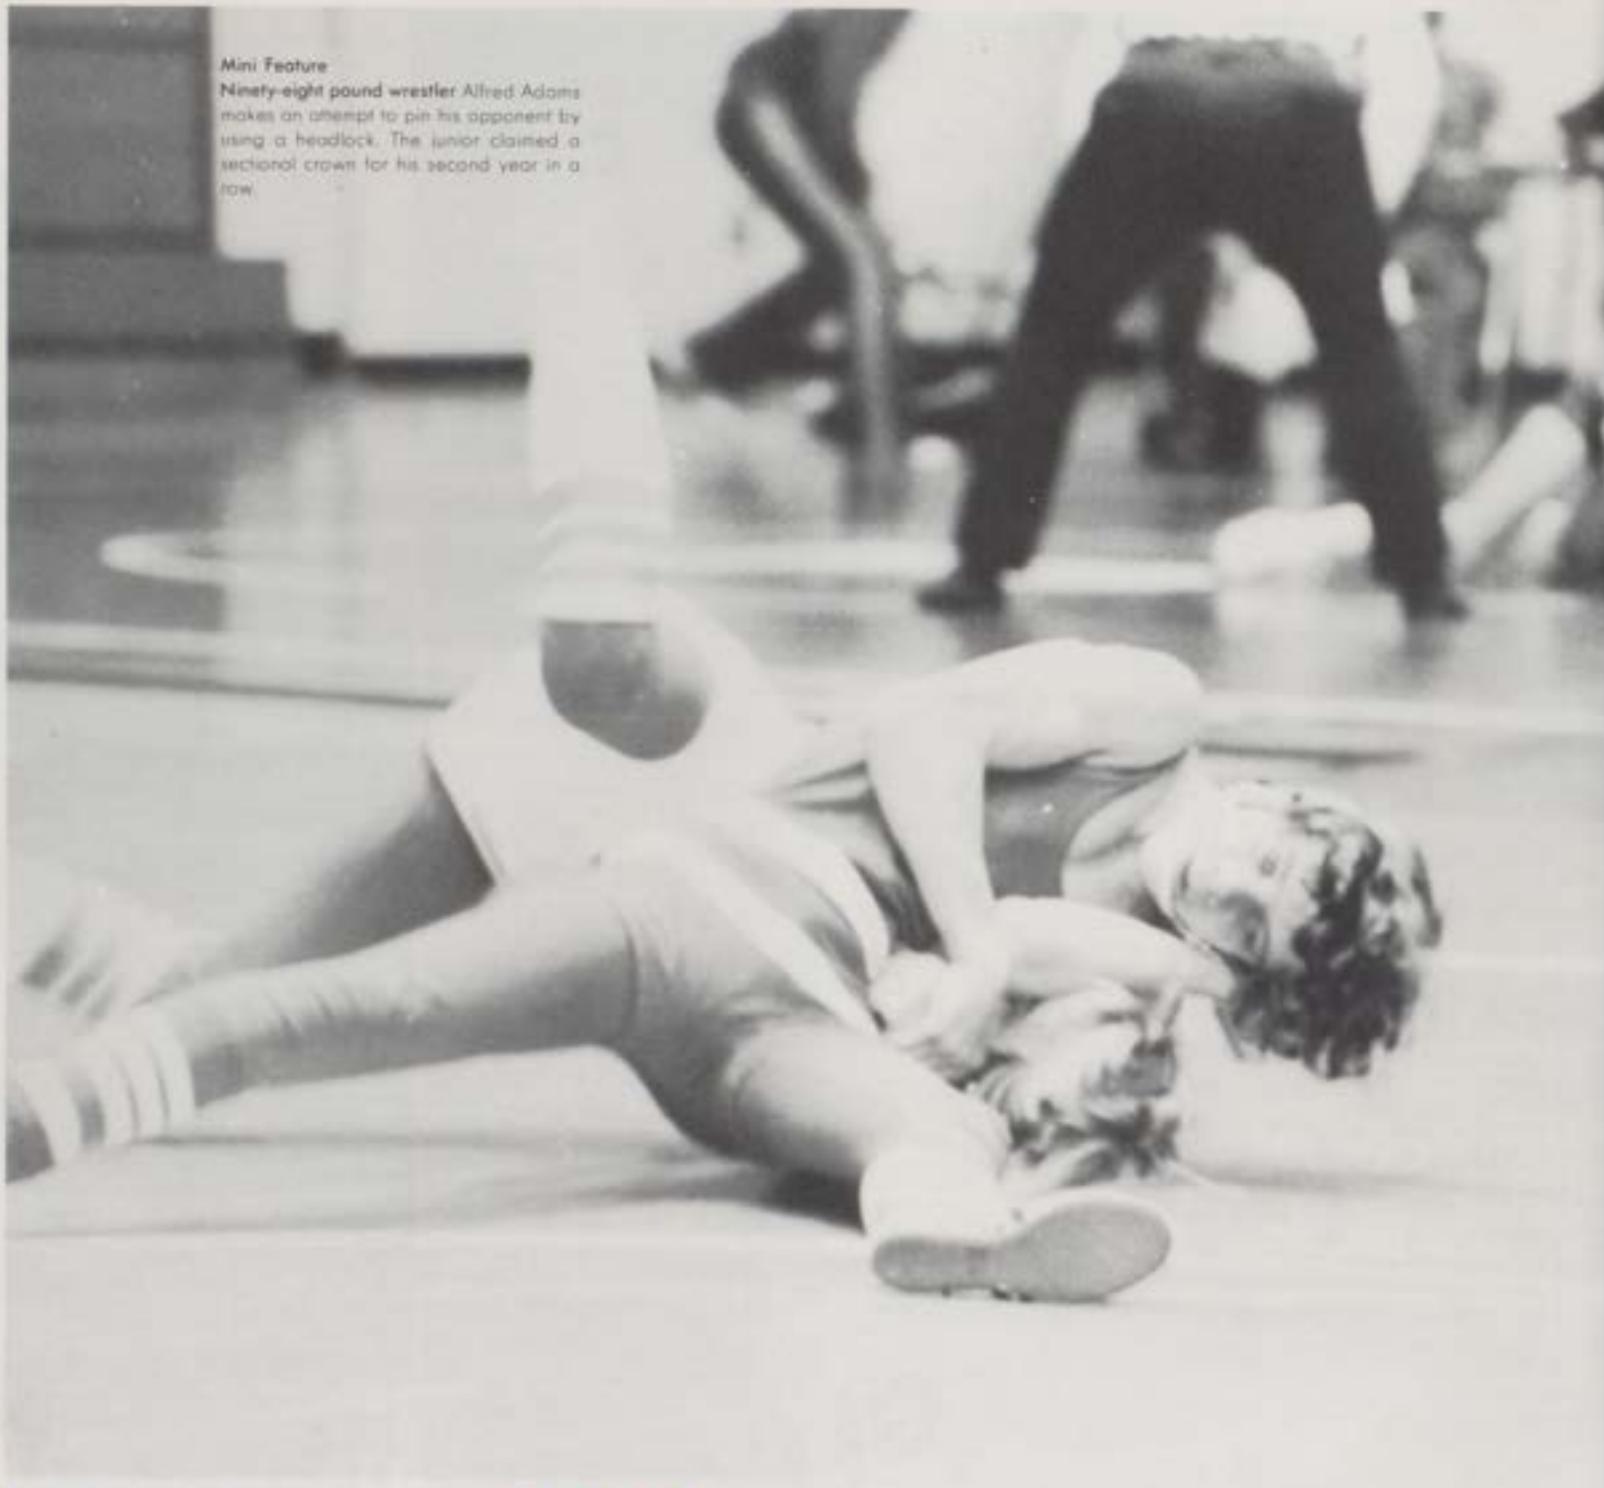

The year, in summary was one of many surprises and one surely of many upsets with the neighbor schools. The February curse had made its claim on the Cubs and brought a firetruck to the growing flames too early in the year. But it also brought fun and great unexpectings to all.

Mini Feature

Ninety-eight pound wrestler Alfred Adams makes an attempt to pin his opponent by using a headlock. The junior claimed a sectional crown for his second year in a row.

Wrestlers go 10-3, second in regionals

When it came to bringing home fame and glory to the school, the fans could always count on the boys wrestling team.

The wrestling team had been a strong group in the school but went without a lot of recognition for a long time even though they deserved it immensely.

The team failed to bring home the sectional championship, but still managed to put one of the best winning percentages in recent times down into the score book.

when Madison placed three firsts in the Hoosier Hills Conference championship tournament. Bringing home the honors were Alfred Adams, Brent Buchanan and Pat Auxier.

Placing second in the sectionals proved not to be so bad after all because the Cubs placed eight wrestlers into the regional competition.

Alfred, 105 pounds, Tim Fulton, 126 pounds, and Pat, 185 pounds, led the team for a second place finish, as a team, in the regionals. Four of the eight boys qualified for semi-state where Pat placed third.

Booted Cub leads team

Brent Buchanan

Junior Brent Buchanan turned in a perfect regular season record with 22 wins and 0 losses. Brent was voted most valuable on the team with his fine accomplishments. Brent's record goes down in the school's history as being among the finest in all the past years.

Brent was booted from the semi-state competition by an opinion call which brought a very sad end to Brent's season. Brent's 26-2 record was truly a success.

Varsity: Mgr. Geoff Grimes, Eric Jones, Alfred Adams, Scott Sedam, Tim Fulton, Brent Buchanan, Keith Lauderbaugh.

An unfortunate call by the referee booted Brent out of semi-state play. The call was a very controversial matter. A hold used by Brent against his opponent could have been called either legal or illegal depending on the referee. Unfortunately the man called it illegal and brought Brent's season to a painful close.

Pat Auxier walks off the mat after a tough match in the regionals. The senior claimed the heavyweight title and went on to the semi-state where he placed third.

Senior Curt Jacobs prepares to start wrestling in the referee position against a Connersville opponent. The co-captain won in that match, but still failed to place in the regional tourney.

Wrestlerettes: Twyla Scudder, Paige Gruemmer, Amy Thomas and Linda Welch. Absent when photo was taken, Lori Morrison. Their duties ranged from keeping time to sweeping off the mats.

Sophomore Tim Breeding looks quite content, but when out on the mat things were different. Tim performed in an important spot for the junior varsity squad this year.

Wrestlers win . . .

Teammates voted 138 pounder, Eric Jones as the sportsmanship award winner, finishing his year with a 18-15-1 record.

112 pounder Keith Lauderbaugh gave quite a show this year for the team, placing a fine 21-7 record to earn the most improved trophy at the annual sports banquet.

Head coach Carl Schaum, assisted by Mr. Mike Robinson, noted that dieting is as essential to a wrestler as a ball is to a basketball player. He noted that repetition is very important in wrestling. The knowledge of the moves by instinct is crucial to a wrestler.

He also gave thanks to the Wrestlerettes, Twyla Scudder, Paige Gruemmer, Linda Welch, Amy Thomas and Lori Morrison. The girls had the responsibility of keeping scores, cleaning mats, keeping times and showing up for all the practices.

The team only practiced 60-90 minutes a day, but never failed to be ready and anxious to take on their opponents.

The 10-3 record set by the squad proved to be the highest won-lost percentages during the last six years and definitely a year well wrestled.

The boys managed to protect and defend the Charlestown invitational championship and being second in the regionals marked tremendous achievement in itself.

Wrestling, to some might have seemed too complicated to understand and therefore they did not take the time to support the team as they did the football or basketball team but the team always managed to make the school proud in wrestling to the end.

Courteny commands

Bobby Courtney

Many hours of conditioning proved Bobby Courtney to be one of the best long distance runners in Southern Indiana. The junior finished a commanding second in the 1600M and a third in the 800M at sectionals. Onward at regionals, he placed third in the 1600M and therefore participated in the 1600M event in the state finals where he finished 20th.

Junior Ken Macy stands patiently as he waits to run an event for the Cub team. Ken played a very important role as one of the members of the record breaking 1600 M relay team.

Practice Practice! And more practice! Juniors Elonda Geymon and Melissa Lunsford stick to that motto as they run up in the top of the gym when weather conditions made it hard to do so outside.

'Did you say track meter?'

Each year the world becomes more and more complex, and the high school level provided no exception. The girls and boys track teams kept pace with the demanding times, converting almost completely to the metric system.

The 100, 200 and 400 meter dashes replaced the 100, 200 and 440 yard dashes; In the hurdles, the changes went from the 100 high and 220 low yards to the 110 high and 300 low meters. The long running events changed from the 880, mile and two mile to the 800, 1600 and 3200 meter runs. At last, the relays went from the 440, 880 (girls) and mile (boys) to the 440, 800 and 1600 meter relays.

The metric changes, however, did not effect the field events with athletes still competing in them through the English terms of feet and inches.

Girls head coach Miss Mary Louise Eisenhardt and boys head coach Mr. Bob Fourthman both agreed the use of the metric system appeared different, but basically the running of the meet itself remained the same. The athletes, they noted, still kept the same goal in mind but when reaching it the distance may have been a little shorter or longer.

With the new system, the girls team also spent time rebuilding their squad. Either due to graduation or moving, they lost state material in Tracey Thaden, Gwen Cosby, Donna Perry, Tracie Bear and Ruth Sternamen.

With the help of student teacher Miss Shelia Ruble, many girls began the season, but only 17, however, stayed to the finish line. Kathy Dugle was the only senior.

Madison failed to place in the sectional, but came very close, according to Coach Eisenhardt who noted the squad secured a few → seventh place finishes but these positions do not receive points.

At the annual spring banquet, six members received citations for their achievements. These included outstanding job in the field events and relays—Kathy Dugle; best relay person—Tammy Backus; best field events—Elonda Geyman; best running—Melissa Lunsford; and best overall running and field events—Paula Fuqua and Wendy Jenkins who tied in awarded points.

In boys action, several new Madison metric records were set. These included the 100 M high hurdles—Kevin Boulton 18.6; 100 M dash—John McIntire 11.2; 1600 M run—Bobby Courtney 4:25.2; 400 M dash—Dennis White 53.3; 400 M relay—Reed Rawson, Holger Hubert, Richard White, Bob Backus 48.1; 300 low hurdles—Gary Birge 42.9; 800 M run—Bobby Courtney 1:58.6; 200 M dash—John McIntire 23.7; 3200 M run—Ben Dattilo 10:22.5; 1600 M relay—John McIntire, Ken Macy, Dennis White, Bobby Courtney 3:35.2.

According to Coach Fourman, the highlight of the Cub season focused on the South Dearborn Invitational where the team placed second with 99.5 points. John McIntire and Bobby Courtney both came home with 22.5 points apiece, in addition to trophies proclaiming them the most valuable persons at the meet. In the field events, Greg Robbins also did an outstanding job, securing two third place finishes in the shot and discus.

At sectional, junior Bobby Courtney finished second in the 1600 M run and third in the 800 M run, thus qualifying him for regionals where he placed third in the 1600 M run.

Knoble and Mr. Dennis Holt were a great help to him. Mr. Knoble, a former head coach, brought with him as an assistant 16 years of experience in running.

As they took an overall look at the season, both coaches stated their athletes improved their times or events each time they competed. Although they may not have been No. 1 in the eyes of outsiders, the satisfaction they gave to themselves made them No. 1 in their own eyes.

The gang's all here. Taking a bench break, the Cubs prepare to bat in one of their Saturday double headers. Pitcher Kerry Souley received the most valuable player citation, along with Robbie Jones, in the Madison Courier tournament.

The voice belonged not to Howard Cosell of national broadcasting fame, but instead to senior Stat Star Cathy Coron. Cathy kept all of the official stats of the games, plus handled the announcing.

Coming from a family of baseball enthusiasts, Coach Gary O'Neal lives baseball year round. The Hanover College graduate led his team to a 20-6 regular season record, which earned a state ranking.

Senior Mark Bishop appears waiting and ready for the ball to come in homeplate. The back catcher received conference distinction, by being nominated for the All-Conference team.

MADISON

Team members gather around Coach Gary O'Neal to review game plans. Coach O'Neal demanded each player work long and hard to receive his share of time on the diamond.

Baseball, hot dogs and apple pie. Although the latter two American traditions are crowd pleasers indeed, Madison fans however prefer baseball anyday.

Head coach Gary O'Neal along with his varsity squad experienced an outstanding year, securing the best winning percentage ever in the history of Madison baseball.

Starting in late February, with snow still covering the ball diamond, pitchers and catchers started toning up. When the rest of the team started playing together, there was just no holding them back.

Like magic, the team put their skills together and never once did they let any opponent take a win without a fight, a Madison baseball tradition.

Always settling for a runner-up position in the Hoosier Hills Conference, the team decided to change that standing this year. And change they did, capturing first place honors.

Besides capturing the conference crown, four seniors were nominated for the HHC-All Conference team—pitcher Robbie Jones, captain Tom Anderson, back catcher Mark Bishop and Scott Davidson. Senior Kerry Sauley also received honorable mention for the distinguished squad.

The gems of the field did not stop with the HHC title, however, but went on to win the championship in the Madison Courier Invitational Tournament. Both Cub pitchers, Robbie and Kerry, were named most valuable players of that tournament.

No. 13 in state

The first place trophy gained in the Madison Courier Invitational Tournament gives the Cubs another taste of victory. The team compiled a 20-6 record in regular season play.

Diamonds . . .

Team victories and championship titles further paid off, when the Indiana High School Baseball Association ranked the Madison squad 13th in the state, after beating state ranked Jeffersonville.

Coach O'Neal often noted the tougher the opponent, the better his team generally performed.

With a 20-6 regular season record under their belts, the team headed for sectionals. Cro-

Senior Scott Davidson receives plenty of encouragement as he returns to the bench after hitting a dynamic home run. Before bowing out in regionals, the Cubs earned a 13th place state ranking.

The Cubs won the sectional crown after defeating Southwestern, an arch rival in any competition, 19-4.

The hopeful notions of sending a team to state then slipped into everyone's mind. But the dream soon faced a setback when the Cubs were forced out of regional action by a powerful Jeffersonville squad.

The long day in the sun, sweating and playing together, paid off however for the team. Their distinguished line of victories and state ranking made the players "diamonds in the dust," rating way ahead of hot dogs and apple pie.

SIZZLING SPORTS

Becky Hall gives a little speech to the large welcoming crowd that greeted the Lady Cubs upon their return home from sectionals. The Cubs defeated Scottsburg in the final round of sectionals.

SCENES

I think I can. I think I can, and did he ever do it. Junior Jack Lucy prepares to cross the sectional finish line with a look of determination and satisfaction after completing the long course.

The long, tiring hours of playing, sweating and sore aching muscles came to a close much earlier than any of the Cub athletes desired.

The excitement of competition, along with the unity of teammates, made the year fade away quickly.

Girls and boys alike had the chance to feel the true meaning of being a winner, and the memory of that feeling will stay with the victors the rest of their lives.

The girls volleyball team won the New Washington sectionals for the eighth straight year, and thus had a fine collection of trophies in the school display case to reflect their successes.

The cross country team won many awards over the year, but the thrill of being crowned the winner of the Jefferson County Invitational Tournament provided one of the best remembrances for the team.

The Lady Cubs basketball team finished a dynamite season with a 17-3 record plus won the Columbus North tournament in addition to capturing the sectional championship.

The swim teams had two teammates to represent Madison in state competition. Beth Ricketts and Chris Bear competed at the state swim meets, with each doing a fine job.

Speaking of state contenders, junior Bobby Courtney wore the red and white uniform in the 1600 meter race for the track team. Bobby was the only one from Madison to reach the state finals.

The year definitely had its fair share of success, where the area of sporting events was concerned.

When school came to a close, a lot of teams put the old glory colors on the rack and waited to see what next year's squad would do in carrying on the fine tradition of winning. But there was one team that still had a lot in store even after the year ended.

The baseball team moved into the summer months with hard practices in the burning sun in order to prepare for the baseball sectionals. It did not take long for the team to take the championship, as the hours of sweat paid off.

All the sports, from golf to tennis, made Madison a strong contender in any event. The Madison squad generally left a few scars on opponents' records, as the Cubs captured the wins themselves.

The sports editors of the 1980 Mahisco too experienced the heartaches and glorious moments along with the teams and individual contenders. In tribute to the many who helped us and especially to the record making athletes who made our job enjoyable, we dedicate this spread to them as we attempt to emphasize "some sizzling sports scenes."

Varsity attains 9-1-1 record while reserves go undefeated

The girls tennis team, like the warm spring sun that penetrated the popular concrete courts, shone brightly this season, establishing a 9-1-1 record plus a fourth place finish in the Hoosier Hills Conference.

Calling the season a "fine year," Coach Ed Schienbein credited much of his team's success to the seven senior members, many of whom have played for four years.

The Madison varsity—claimed victories over Milan, Seymour (first match), Jeffersonville, Scottsburg, Charlestown, Austin, South Dearborn, New Albany and Floyd Central. The experienced squad suffered only one defeat, to Seymour in a close second match, and a 3-3 tie with Lawrenceburg.

"We lost one game we shouldn't have to Seymour, but we didn't win any we shouldn't have," noted the coach, who resigned at the end of the season due to his heavy coaching schedule. During the year, Mr. Schienbein also coached girls varsity basketball and assisted with varsity football.

The fourth place finish in the Hoosier Hills conference, the coach noted, lacked one point of being a third place ranking. This marked the highest standing Madison ever secured in conference competition.

But like other spring sports, the tennis team frequently faced interference from the weather, having four meets rained out. One match, East Central, Mr. Schienbein pointed out, has been rained out two years in a row.

The varsity had high hopes of doing well in sectional play, which was scheduled for the day after the Junior-Senior Prom. The games were delayed until the next week, however, due to heavy rains which plagued prom activities the night before and persisted throughout the day.

But the sun never shone for the Madison squad when the games resumed two days later. Heidi Ison and Valerie Harness reached the third round in doubles competition, but Madison as a team failed to place high.

In addition to varsity accolades, the reserve team demanded equal attention with its 7-0 record. Key reserve players included Mary Beth Kring, Ann Schlichte, Sally Henderson, Kim Kroll and Jill Muensterman.

At the spring sports banquet, senior Valerie Harness received the most valuable player citation. Seniors recognized, in addition to Valerie, included Carla Eades, Beth Elston, Heidi Ison, Tammy Sexton, Anita Scroggins and Jean Will.

Valerie Harness attempts to measure the impact of the tennis ball from her opponent. Valerie, who placed third in conference competition along with Tammy Sexton, received the most valuable player award.

Reserve player Sally Henderson finds protection from the gusty March winds inside the girls' gymnasium. Inclement weather frequently forced the athletes inside for their practice sessions.

Oblivious to the fans surrounding the courts, senior Jean Will gives 100 percent attention to her game, as she attempts to surpass her opponent. The team placed fourth in conference play.

The setting sun causes senior Beth Elston a moment of difficulty as she attempts to contact the ball. A member of the varsity squad for four years, Beth also taught tennis lessons for the city.

Golfers swing high and low

"We had a lot of fun doing it. The day I shot 112 for 9 holes, I just wanted to go home," joked girls golf team member Lisa Benham

Warm, sunny spring days beckon senior Randy Johann to the Sunrise Golf Course for a practice session. Randy gained team recognition by hitting the longest shot of 160 yards.

The boys varsity golf team, under the direction of Mr. Barry Cooper, stroked its way to a 11-8 record while the Lady Cubs feed off their season with a perfect no-win record.

Coach Cooper commented he was very pleased with the boys squad, which was led by senior Matt Webster, junior Ron Dunbar and freshman Danny Hambrick. "Those three were all even as far as points go," the coach noted.

In Hoosier Hills Conference competition, the boys placed seventh, plus finished fourth out of 11 teams in one invitational tourney.

The boys team carried five varsity and three junior varsity members. In addition to the three point leaders, the varsity included Paul Dunker and Randy Johann. The junior varsity was comprised of Derin Lowry, Donn Dunker and Brook Gruemmer.

Randy Johann received the most improved citation, with Ron Dunbar attaining the most valuable award. The varsity members all received sports letters, and the junior varsity certificates.

Randy noted he had an off-year at the beginning of the season, but got things going by the end, however, to hit the longest shot on the team of 160 yards.

The girls golf team, who consisted of four seniors who all lettered, was led by senior Valerie Harness. Other team members included Lisa Benham, Kathy Dugle and Denise Hambrick.

Despite their losing season, Lisa noted she and her fellow team members "had a lot of fun doing it."

She noted on one occasion when playing on an unfamiliar course with a lot of sand traps and water holes, she ended up shooting 112 for 9 holes.

"I just wanted to go home," she jokingly recalled.

by Keith Hill

Although the girls team did not capture any victories during regular season play, members still called the season fun and worthwhile. Valerie Harness refuses to submit to defeat and continues practice.

All competitive levels of golf, from high school to professional, include varsity member Paul Dunker. Paul and his twin brother Donn spend a lot of time on Madison's two golf courses.

Many yearbook advertisers can be observed from this view of Madison's hilltop along state highway 62. The Clifty Drive area continued to grow, as more than six businesses were constructed.

Business in Madison not only fired up, but it blazed. The hilltop furnished new hangouts for teenagers with the addition of Burger King, Hardee's, Mr. Gatti's and Wendy's. The downtown area continued providing its various wares and services to the towns people, as well.

A friend or classmate's face behind the work counter proved a common sight. A large percentage of students hold jobs in the community. They labor to pay for their car, save for college or marriage, and purchase personal items, such as clothes. Whatever the reason, students could be seen in a variety of jobs from funeral home to store clerk.

Carolyn Guthrie shows Chris Dixon a pair of Levi's as they shop together during sixth period. The two seniors often took advantage of the upperclassmen privilege, and left school early to shop.

Despite having a cast on her leg, Kathy Love maintained her admiration for dancing.

The senior taught ballet, tap and jazz at a local dance school, where she commenced her own lessons 13 years ago.

The Sigma sorority member indicated she became interested in this particular past-time, as a result of her mother enrolling her in a dance school at the age of four because she was so "clumsy."

"It really did help me," laughed Kathy, "so I just stayed with it."

In addition to students, she noted she sometimes teaches her family a step or two.

Although Kathy has mastered many dance steps, she mainly centers on ballet.

"The most difficult technique in dancing is ballet," she noted, explaining ballet is an art which

Another difficult maneuver involves the jumps in ballet, stated Kathy, who broke her foot trying a new jump.

The swimmer mentioned she did experience some difficulty teaching her friends and girls her own age dance steps.

"They sometimes look strangely at me as if to ask—what are you doing teaching me,—but after while they tend to loosen up and accept me as their instructor," she said.

When she first started dancing, the instructor noted jazz involved basically arm and leg movements, but since the dance has changed to consist of the whole body.

The teenage instructor confided she has never danced professionally but it is a dream she thinks about once in a while.

"Dancing," she reflected, "gives me the chance to express myself as a whole and also a way to work off stress. Just like some people run and yell when they are all worked up, I just go out and dance."

Michele 'On the Air'

The flashing red light "On the Air" signaled the start of senior Michele Horine's broadcasting day.

Michele began working at the local radio station in September through the help of Mr. Paul Meyer, VICA adviser.

On her first day, Michele noted she learned how to operate the board, a control panel used at the station, with the assistance of a disc jockey.

Interviewing coaches, waiting for interviews and announcing stories basically comprised her job.

"Sometimes I have to call in stories and let one of the DJ's record and play it on the air," stated Michele, referring to her late night coverage assignments.

Later in the year when she became aware of station operations, she handled news coverage such as the school board meetings and community activities.

The DJ remarked that the atmosphere at the radio station sometimes became hectic with everyone running around doing different things; but it also provided a friendly surrounding involving people laughing and helping each other out.

"This job gives me a chance to learn things about the career I have chosen to go into," noted Michele, who also served as editor of the 1979 Mahisco.

Planning to go to Ball State University and major in journalism, Michele said she hopes her job will become a full-time one this summer.

The novice said she was very nervous when she first started announcing, but soon became immunized.

Michele explained she writes her own scripts and does some commercials.

"Some of my fellow students," she commented, "seem to think it is neat to have one of their classmates working as a disc jockey, but most people don't believe me when I tell them. They are surprised."

by Mary Jo Courtney

Senior Michele Horine awaits the cue to begin her broadcasting day at local station WORX. She began her career in the fall with the help of Mr. Paul Meyer through the VICA work program.

Our pain, his profit

Fresh air, suntan, exercise and money included a few of the benefits junior John Stuckwisch derived while mowing lawns for three consecutive summers.

The junior referred to mowing lawns as a "good job as far as the money is concerned but not very exciting."

Planning to work his way through college, John noted by mid-summer, he generally made approximately $120 a week mowing an average of six lawns a week. He added these jobs generally took him from 12 to 14 hours per week to do, thus making lawn mowing one of the highest paying jobs a high school student could attain.

Many other students earned money in a similar fashion, with some even adding trimming and weeding options for even more extra cash.

up for sale was all that it took to get started in the business, explained John.

The three-year veteran noted most of his customers come by "word of mouth" and are very cooperative except for the ones who "never tell what they wanted."

John stated he uses two mowers, a riding outfit and a push model. Other benefits of the job, noted the junior, comprise being his own boss.

And besides working whenever he wanted, he automatically received all the rainy days off.

He concluded he seldom took on other jobs such as raking leaves and shoveling snow, but was willing to tackle such tasks when asked.

Junior Melinda Moler, like many students, found part-time employment with local business firms. Working as a secretary for a local heating and air conditioning business, Melinda noted her job was fun and not extremely difficult.

She worked approximately 1.5 hours after school each day.

The only requirements for the job, the junior noted, included typing and calculator skills.

pounded, included answering the telephone, doing filing and completing business forms.

She added that she has been working there approximately 18 months, and possibly may select the secretarial profession as a career.

Senior manages club

Eddie Sublett, a senior, experienced the unique job as the manager of the Boys Club.

The manager stated he primarily worked at the club because he "liked kids."

Opening the building, keeping track of inventory, teaching a gymnastics class and keeping up maintenance included some of his responsibilities.

"If something needs fixing I fix it," Eddie proudly stated.

Eddie has been involved with the club in one way or another for 14 years. He claimed the club helped curb his temper and also helped him to mature.

Having to possess patience was the senior's biggest problem working with the young age group.

He remarked knowing nobody can do the job as well as he does gives him satisfaction.

'Coffin' up money

Most students view a funeral home as dark and depressing, but Robbie Whiteford envisioned a bright future as a mortician in such somber surroundings.

Robbie, who had what was probably the strongest of all student jobs, said he liked his work.

Janitorial work and helping out at funerals were Robbie's main tasks.

He was required to wear short hair and to display good manners for the job the junior declared.

Although Robbie said he heard a lot of jokes pertaining to his job he mentioned it is a good field to get into because a mortician makes a lot of money and the work is not very hard.

His job in the funeral home, expressed the future mortician, however, made him callous toward death to an extent.

The junior spent two hours

Cleaning a church compares to cleaning a house, according to church janitor Natalie Stephan, even though one has to be more thorough because it is "God's house."

Various tasks that had to be done, stated the senior, consisted of pulling weeds, cutting the grass, mopping the floors and sweeping.

of the more unfortunate tasks although her father frequently helped.

She emphasized her responsibilities included taking care of the church grounds, 12 Sunday school classes, an auditorium and a basement.

The church, according to Nathalie, served approximately 175 people a week and took about five or six hours to clean.

She noted she usually worked an average of three or Working for the Rykers Ridge Baptist Church, where she was also held membership, Nathalie noted she liked the convenience of the job (she could work whenever she wanted to) and the fact she was her own boss.

Like other students who do part-time janitorial work for their churches, such as Jo Fairchild and Brent Howell, Nathalie explained her basic reason for ac-

In addition to the extra income, however, Nathalie concluded it was "pretty satisfying doing stuff for people and for God."

"Grandpa" provided the answer for most of John Ferrell's questions, such as, "How did you get involved in farming and tobacco?", "Does anyone else in your family farm?" and "Whose tractor do you use?"

John, who has been involved in farming for several years, has raised his own crop for three. Last summer, he cultivated 4,000 pounds of his own tobacco, plus helped his mother's family with their crop.

"It seems like farming takes up three fourths of my time," the junior declared. Although growing tobacco was almost a full year's job, John explained he did enjoy a few short months away from tobacco farming.

August and September rates as the busiest times of the year with the cutting and housing of tobacco. Money time took place somewhere around January and

Umping for dollars

Umpiring a summer little league baseball team provided a lot of fun and a little extra spending money for junior Tim Davis, who umpired for two consecutive years.

Tim noted a job with the city was responsible for getting the umpire job. The major requirement, he added, was to master a rule book outlining the regulations.

The only real problem he faced during the games involved coaches contending he made a bad call, which reflected the fact he was younger than the coaches and the other umpires.

He also emphasized he "always stuck" to his call and never changed a decision. As a result of his umpiring, he added he now takes more interest in watching and listening to the call umps make on television and during local sporting events.

He concluded one of the most enjoyable things in umpiring little league is when the "little guys" argue back.

Junior Tim Davis, who has worked for the past two years as a city little-league umpire, demonstrates the "safe" sign. In addition to coaches sometimes contesting calls, the "little guys" argue back.

'Operation' hospital

A hospital usually does not seem too complicated to the outside world, but according to Barbara Kennett its operation demands a lot more than meets the eye.

Barb has been employed in the accounting department of the local hospital since her junior year.

The VICA member noted she was referred to her job by Mr. Paul Meyer, VICA adviser.

Her part-time job primarily consists of key-punching, which is the process of keeping information and filing reports that come in and out of the hospital.

"The equipment is like a typewriter and adding machine combined. If a person knows how to operate the two, then it is usually a smooth process," exclaimed Barb.

The senior mentioned when she first began working at the hospital she was not interested in data processing at all, but as time went on, began to learn about and like her job.

"I play a big roll in the data processing department," admitted Barb, "because I spend a lot of time doing it and I am always willing to put in some extra time."

Barb stated she enjoyed her work very much and considers it both rewarding and interesting.

"I am always learning something new and it keeps me busy," remarked the student worker.

Data processing is not a common type job, she explained, because not very many places locally use this type of system except for the banks.

At the hospital, Barbara noted most of the business work, billings and insurance claims rely on data processing.

Although hospital work generates medical thoughts, a mainstay in hospital operations involves the office area. Student worker Barbara Kennett quickly learns the value of hospital record-keeping.

Tim runs for money

Tim Furnish, like many other students, earned "extra bucks" by working in a department store.

The senior, who became interested in this style of work through his older brother, commenced his job as a sophomore.

His part-time job mainly consisted of sweeping floors, moving freight and being a "gopher" (go-for), chuckled Tim.

The tennis player joked the aspects of work he most enjoyed involved the pay checks, lunches, breaks, goofing off and going home. He expressed only one dislike, the job took up too much free time on the week-ends.

A couple of surprising facts which he had learned from working in the department store, Tim said, were how much the owners mark up the prices and how they sometimes loose money on some sales in order to attract customers.

school students working at his place of employment, who are usually part-time, man the check-out counter, cut fabric and move freight.

Tim said when he started out with his job he received minimum wage, but as the year progressed earned a nickel raise.

Tim, like many other students received minimum wage which was $2.90.

"I have never gotten a raise by asking for one. My boss always comes up with some frivolous excuse. Usually he will just give me a nickel raise when business is unusually good," expressed Tim.

Weird things always happen at work, stated Tim.

"It is not uncommon for me to knock pictures or glasses off a shelf and break them," said Tim.

The most unusual thing that happened, he cited was the time his boss fell off a 40 foot high shelf of canning jars and landed on a case of Charmin.

"Good thing Mr. Whipple was not around," Tim joked thinking about the episode, "or he would have been disappointed."

by Mary Jo Courtney

Tim Furnish finds break time one of the more enjoyable aspects of part-time work. Students usually utilize these breaks for cramming for tests or just going out and meeting new people.

Scream for ice cream

Dipping ice cream cones and making scrumptious treats kept senior Chris Dixon busy, as an employee of a local ice cream shop.

The senior noted the job made her a better customer by teaching what it was like being on the other side of the counter. One of her customers asked for two scoops of chocolate ice cream on one sugar cone. But upon presentation of the cone, he told her that he had asked for two different sugar cones with one scoop of chocolate on each. Chris even claimed she could name all 31 flavors her store featured, starting with "pralines-n-cream, jogger's janoco, quarter-back crunch, pumpkin pie . . . ."

by Jill O'Brien

Senior Chris Dixon pleases another hungry customer with a tempting ice cream cone. Surrounded by 31 delectable flavors, the student worker noted chocolate mint still rates as her favorite.

Romantic thoughts swirl in Tracy Anderson's head, as Randy Lakeman convincingly promises his love. The two Drama Club members had leading roles in the all school play, "Missing Link."

Kathy Gray, Jennifer Roberts, Tommy Smith, Lisa Murphy and Mary Jo Courtney prepare a counter letter to the Madison Courier, after Southwestern basketball fans criticize Madison for poor sportsmanship.

The biology field trip to Pine Mountain Settlement School in Kentucky combined both fun times and academics. Hiking over the scenic, rolling hills provided one of the students' favorite activities.

Madisonian news editor Mary Aulick contemplated a catchy headline to complement an indepth story. Each issue, Mary wrote one or more lead stories, plus handled the paste-up of the news pages.

Keeping the fire burning

As the final months of the school year rushed by, students kept the fire of school spirit burning by involvement in various activities. Classrooms and hallways came alive with the buds of spring, as the "Spring Fling" decoration contest was continued for the third year. Getting out of class for the musical, "Oklahoma!" and also for fire and tornado drills, helped to make it a "beautiful day."

Activities outside of school kept students on the move, as well. Student Government Day furnished real life experience in city jobs for several seniors. The biology field trips gave other students experience—in first hand observation of nature, rather than a job. For those involved in neither activity, the first Morp dance (prom spelled backwards) provided some fun.

In school, or out, students' active participation in events helped to keep the fire burning.

Sunshine president Nathalie Stephan pours herself a soft drink at the club's "Tea," held in the library. The event honored graduating senior girls and also "ideal ladies" chosen by individual members earlier in the year.

Yearbook staffer Jill O'Brien spreads out her papers to find the needed character count for a headline, so she can think of a headline for a mini-feature in the senior section. Jill served as a co-editor of the section.

Sophomores Chris Nemeth and Pam Ambucci follow the arrangement for clarinets as they play in the pit band for the school's production of the Broadway musical hit, "Oklahoma!"

Jackie Ward and Mike Henderson keep their paper socks closed to seal the secret of what the Mop King and queen will wear for their crowning. This dance, sponsored by Student Council, was the first of this kind.

Tina Focemire and Michelle Taylor listen attentively to Mr. Jerry Isom as they take notes during the biology field trip to Pine Mountain, Kentucky. Since the trip lasted several days, the students had to miss school.

Leaving with a blaze of glory

Although the month of May passed with many tears, students still let their spirit shine. Banquets held by various groups and teams gave recognition to outstanding members, with special awards acknowledging individual spirit. Final exams were even taken with a smile, as students who had not missed a day delighted in knowing the tests would not count.

After seniors attended their final day of school at Honor Day, they entered the path of life with a free meal from the cafeteria before they were pushed into the world. Even though the path for underclassmen still meant a trip to class, they found the road much clearer with the seniors out of the hall.

Each class left for the year with energy to spare. The seniors gave their class yell after turning their tassles on graduation. To the janitors' dismay, juniors and sophomores showed their spirit on the last day by tossing old papers and notebooks straight from their lockers to the hall floors. They were FIRED UPI.

Seniors Brad Allen, Dennis White and Beth Elston remain standing as they wait for their fellow classmates to arrive at their seats for Honor Day. Prior to marching in, Dennis was fired up, and joked he would wear his Indiana State hat for the program. Instead, he tucked it inside his jacket.

Ellen Neff and Ray Munier direct their attention to Betty Parks, as they try to understand her words over the loud music of the rock group Tyler at the Junior-Senior Prom.
